HUNTER, John:

Widely known as one of the leaders of the turf in America; born Hunter's Island, Westchester County, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1833, his place of birth being the estate and mansion of his grandfather, who was one of the leading men in the State politics of N. Y. and a member of the State Senate. His father was Elias Desbrosses Hunter, and his mother was Ann Munro, a daughter of Peter J. Munro, secretary of legation for John Jay when he went to Spain as U. S. minister in 1780. He received his education for the most part from private tutors, the only exception to this being six months of study in the grammar school of Columbia College; after completing his schooling he made no effort to engage in business, professional or public life; the heir to a valuable estate, he had no desire or occasion to engage in avocations of this character, and found the care of the property confided to his charge sufficient employment to keep him engaged; public life has never had any attractions for him. Democratic in his political views, he has avoided any marked activity in political affairs or aspiration for office, the only position to which he was ever elected by the people being that of presidential elector in 1884 for New York State in the election of Grover Cleveland; outside of his personal property and business interests his chief occupation has been in connection with the turf, with the progress of which in America he has been identified since 1856, and has done much towards the development of the American thoroughbred horse and aided in freeing the race-course from the evils which early surrounded it; he succeeded August Belmont as president of the Jockey Club; this position he resigned in Dec., 1894, and was succeeded in it by August Belmont, Jr.; was also chairman of the Board of Control until it went out of existence; married Miss Annie Middleton, daughter of Henry A. Middleton, of South Carolina, and has had a family of eight children. Address, 308 West 125th St., N. Y. City.

JEFFERIS, William Walter:

Banker; born Westchester, Pa., Jan., 12, 1820; son of Horatio F. and Hannah Paul Jefferis; educated at the public schools, West Chester; succeeding his father in the National Bank of Chester County; married Anna E. Elmore, of Fort Edward, Wis. Is a mineralogist of prominence. His life interest and work outside business hours has been mineralogy and botany; he has been referred to by Professor Dana, L. A. Genth, Shepard and others, in their published works, as having given them valuable information and assistance. He had one of the finest individual collections in this country and spent as lavishly of his means as he did of his time in building up a marvelous collection, with the eye of a connoisseur; this fine collection has recently been sold to the Carnegie Museum, at Pittsburgh, Pa., with the understanding that it is to be known in perpetuity as the Wm. W. Jefferis Mineral Collection of the Carnegie Museum. In 1876 he was unanimously elected by the committee on teachers and instruction as Emeritus Professor of Mineralogy of the State Normal School, West Chester, Pa.; is also a member of the following societies: the American Association for the Advancement of Science; the American Philosophical Society of Philadelphia; of the Department of Archaeology, University of Pennsylvania; Buffalo Society of Natural History. D. from Union College, 1898; Oberlin, 1898; and Yale, 1903. Address, 121 West 85th St., N. Y. City.

JEFFERSON, Joseph:

Actor; born Philadelphia, 1829; his parents were strolling players, who educated him in their profession; in his youth he played with most of the famous theatrical stars of the day and intended to become a tragedian; it was not until he chanced to read Washington Irving's Sleepy Hollow Tales that he decided to change his character work to comedy; about forty years ago the play of Rip Van Winkle was written and the leading role offered to him; he has lost sight of the number of times he has impersonated the hero of the twenty years' sleep; the actor tires of the part at times, but the public, never. Next to "Rip," the character he enjoys most is "Bob Acres" in The Rivals. Besides being the head of his profession, the veteran actor is a painter and lecturer of no mean ability; when not employed upon the stage, he puts in his time with his family and friends at Buzzard's Bay, Mass.; member of the Lotos, Century, Players, Authors and Colonial Clubs and the Metropolitan Museum of Art; he has a beautiful cottage at Palm Beach and also a magnificent home in Louisiana. Address, 1440 Broadway, N. Y. City.

JOHNSON, Robert Underwood:

Associate editor of Century Magazine; born on Capitol Hill, Washington, D. C., Jan. 12, 1853; his father, the late Hon. Nimrod H. Johnson, was an able lawyer and jurist. After an ordinary high school education at Centreville, Ind., he matriculated at Earlham College, an institution of the Society of Friends at Richmond, Ind., in 1867; in 1871, at the age of eighteen, he was graduated from that institution as Bachelor of Science, to which the college, in 1886, added the honorary degree of Ph. D.; he went immediately into business as clerk in the Western agency of the Scribner Educational Books, Chicago, 1873, became connected with the editorial staff of the Century Magazine (then Scribner's Monthly), a connection which still exists. On the death of the editor-in-chief, Dr. J. G. Holland, in 1881, R. W. Gilder became the editor and Robert Johnson succeeded him as the associate editor; this position he now occupies. His literary work, in addition to his daily and exacting editorial duties has been confined to editorial and critical articles, and to verse. In 1883 Mr. Gilder entrusted to Mr. Johnson and Mr. C. C. Buel, the assistant editor, the conduct of the well known Century War Series, and they also had charge of it in the enlarged and revised publication in four volumes; Battles and Leaders of the Civil War. The series added one hundred thousand to the circulation of the Century. In Dec., 1892, published a volume entitled The Winter Hour and Other Poems, including contributions to the Atlantic Monthly, The Century, Harper's Monthly, St. Nicholas. The Christian Union, The Independent, The Tribune, and other periodicals, and also the hymn, Praise to Thee, O God of Freedom, sung to Haydn's music of the dedication of the Washington Arch, N. Y. City, in 1890; in 1897, appeared his second volume, Songs of Liberty and Other Poems; this included an Apostrophe to Greece, a long poem, published in The Independent, N. Y. City, in 1896, and a translation of part of it included in the Greek record of the Olympian Games of that year; also two blank verse odes. The Voice of Webster and Hands Across Sea, and a series of metrical paraphrases from the Servian after literal translations by Nikola Tesla, the electrical inventor. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society and of the Authors Club, the Century Club, and The Players, of N. Y. City; member of the executive committee of the New York Civil Service Reform Association; member of the American Forestry Association; member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, of which he is also secretary. Since 1883 has been actively connected with the International copyright movement, having been for several years treasurer of the American Copyright League, and a member of its executive committee of five; in 1889 he exchanged the treasurership for the more responsible work of secretary of the league, becoming by this office also secretary of the joint executive committee of authors, publishers and printers in charge of the campaign for the Copyright Bill. His services in the fight for International Copyright were widely recognized; by decree of March 11, 1891, the French government conferred upon him the Cross of the Legion of Honor (Chevalier), and on June 17, 1895, King Humbert conferred upon him the Cross of the Crown of Italy (Cavaliere), that country having accepted the International Copyright Law by reciprocity in 1894; in 1891 he was a recipient of the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Yale University, and of pieces of silver plate from American publishers and from the Incorporated Society of Authors of London. Has been much interested in the subject of forestry reform and in public parks. He originated and, in conjunction with John Muir, took the leading part in securing the creation of the Yosemite National Park (1890), and devoted much attention to the movement in favor of securing a better supervision of the Yosemite Valley, which he visited in June, 1889; 1892, was made honorary member of the Sierra Club of San Francisco; was a member of the executive committee of the Mohonk Conference for Arbitration, 1896. Married, in 1876, Miss Katharine McMahon of Washington, D. C. In 1902, under the title of Poems, appeared a volume of his collected verse, including the two previous volumes, besides the Italian Rhapsody, and many other pieces. Address, Century Magazine, Union Square, N. Y.

JOHNSTON, Samuel:

Inventor and manufacturer; born Shelby, Orleans Co., N. B., 1835; married Arsula S. Vaughan, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. Invented: The Johnston system of harvesting machinery; metal rolling mills; metal roller forging machines; a fire and water-proof builder's cement, which makes a remarkably perfect substitute for brick, stone and wood. Re-discoveries of lost arts: the lost art of mixing refractory materials or mixtures in which fuel burns to high temperature without injury to the apparatus; lost art of burning fuel to complete combustion and high temperature; lost art of making permanent moulds, in which all methods may be formed to duplicates, and a core material that is so free from gas when the metal comes in contact that the core may be surrounded by metal; also the art of melting rustless bronzes. These bronzes are the cheapest and the strongest, and tarnish slowly. By the re-discovery of the art of burning fuel to complete combustion and high temperature, and, by adding the features of storing and making the heat current reducing or oxydizing, fuel burning is reduced to a science; through this discovery all the arts in which the character of the heat and the temperature play an important part have been reduced to a science. His system that he is now engaged in installing is a heat storage system, the fuel is burned for all it is worth, and stored in refractory material that is completely insulated; the heat is drawn out in the exact quantity to give the exact desired temperature. Neither heat nor flue gases are discharged into the air. Address, 205 Cleveland Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

JUCH, Mme. Emma Johanna Antonia (Mrs. Francis L. Wellman):

Operatic singer; born in Vienna, Austria-Hungary, July 4, 1863; her father, Justin Juch, was a music professor; he was a native of Vienna, but had become a citizen of the U. S., in Detroit, Michigan; he married Miss Augusta Hahn. Emma was born during a visit made by her parents in Vienna; when she was two years old her parents returned to the U. S., and made their home in N. Y. City; here she passed through the public schools, and was graduated from the Normal School in 1879; her father recognized her musical talents, but did not encourage her to cultivate them, as he was opposed to her entering the professional field. Emma Juch inherited her fine voice from her French-Hanoverian mother, and decided to pursue her musical studies in secret; she studied for two years with Madame Murio-Celli, and made her debut in a concert in Chickering Hall; her father was among her auditors and he listened to her singing with surprise; her triumph was perfect. Her father then encouraged her to pursue the study of music, and for two years she was subject to the severest discipline; her pure, strong soprano voice gained in power and flexibility. In May, 1881, Colonel Mapleson engaged her to sing leading soprano roles in her Majesty's Grand Italian Opera in London, Eng. There she made her debut as Filina in Mignon and won brilliant triumph in June, 1881; she then appeared as Violetta in Traviata, as Queen of Night in Magic Flute, as Martha in Martha, as Marguerite in Faust, as the Queen in Les Huguenots, and as Isabella in Robert le Diable. She sang during three seasons under Colonel Mapleson's management, and when her contract lapsed she refused to renew it. William Steinway, of N. Y. City, introduced her to Theodore Thomas, and she accepted from this manager an offer to share the work of Nilsson and Materna in the tour of the Wagnerian artists, Materna, Scaria and Winkelmann. Mme. Juch sang alternate nights with Nilsson as Elsa in Lohengrin; she won a series of triumphs in that tour. When the American Opera Company was formed she was the first artist engaged; many tempting offers were made to her, but she decided to remain with the American Opera Company; during three seasons with that company she sang in six roles and one hundred and sixty-four times; the operas presented were Magic Flute, Lohengrin, The Flying Dutchman, Gluck's Orpheus, Rubenstein's Nero, and Gounod's Faust. During the next four or five years she was constantly before the public in festivals or orchestral symphonic concerts and the German Choral Societies, and in the Emma Juch Grand English Opera Company; the Aschenbroedel Verein of professional orchestra musicians conferred upon her the unusual compliment of honorary membership, in return for her services given in aid of the society's sick fund. Mme. Juch possesses a fine stage presence, a powerful and cultured voice; her fine singing was coupled with equally fine acting. Married, June 25, 1894, at Stamford, Conn., Francis L. Wellman, of the N. Y. City Bar. Address, 123 East 37th St., N. Y. City.

For three years he was a student at the National Academy of Design, New York, later was connected for several years with the New York Tribune, for nine years was editor of National Academy Notes, and in 1884 edited the Art Union Magazine. From 1883 to 1886, inclusive, he was Director of the Art Department of the Southern Exposition, at Louisville, Ky. In 1889 he became art editor of the New York Daily Star, and subsequently had added to his duties the literary editorship and the direction of the Sunday Star. In 1891 he relinquished journalistic work to become Assistant-Chief of the Department of Fine Arts of the World's Columbian Exposition, at Chicago. Mr. Kurtz acted in an advisory capacity for the Art Committee of the St. Louis Annual Exposition of 1893, and at the close of the Columbian Exposition was tendered the Art-Directorship of the St.

Louis Exposition. In 1894, and during the five years following visited the art centers of this country and Europe in the interests of this Exposition, which under his direction, gained reputation of holding "the most advanced art exhibition of the year in the United States." During these years, at St. Louis was shown the first organized exhibit of works by the famous painters of the "Glasgow School" to be seen in this country, and here also the painters of the German "Secession" made their debut in America, while other collections adequately illustrated the contemporary art of France, Holland and Denmark. In 1898 the Directors of the Trans-Mississippi International Exposition, of Omaha, conferred upon Mr. Kurtz a diploma and a medal, "in recognition of his valuable services in connection with the Fine Arts Exhibit." In February, 1899, he was appointed Assistant-Director of Fine Arts for the United States Commission to the Paris Exposition of 1900, and assisted in the organization of the work of the Department, later finding it necessary to resign the position on account of severe and protracted illness. He was appointed Assistant-Chief of the Department of Art of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in August, 1901. LAWRENCE, William Van Duzer:

Manufacturer. Three sons of William Lawrence, the friend of Milton, came to the American Colonies, first settling in New England, and later came to New Netherland and became landowners, men of wealth and influence in the Province. The eldest of the three brothers, William Lawrence, was the head of the patentees of Flushing, L. I., in 1645, and a magistrate under the Dutch administration, and was an ancestor of Lieutenant Nathaniel Lawrence, who distinguished himself in the Revolutionary period, as well as of Captain James Lawrence, U. S. Navy, commander of the frigate Chesapeake in its memorable action with the British ship Shannon, in 1813. Of the branch of the old Flushing settler the subject of this sketch is a lineal descendant. William Van Duzer Lawrence is the son of Robert D. Lawrence. His mother's maiden name was Catherine Van Duzer, of Holland Dutch ancestry, and descendant of a family of prominence and influence in Orange County, N. Y.

Born near Elmira, N. Y., Feb. 12, 1842; his parents thence moved westward; was educated in Michigan, but when nineteen years of age he returned to the East, settled down in N. Y. City, and accepted employment in the wholesale drug store of S. R. Van Duzer & Co., and there remained for a period of five years. In 1866 he went to Canada, whither he went to establish a branch house representing several American medicine manufacturers, among which were Perry Davis & Son, of Providence, R. I. For a period of twenty-two years he devoted himself to the promotion of the business, afterwards merged into the Davis & Lawrence Co., Limited, which has now been a prominent house in Montreal for over twenty-one years. In 1895 the Davis & Lawrence Co., of Montreal, bought out and absorbed the long-established business of Perry Davis & Son, of Providence, R. I., who retired from business, the new corporation purchasing all its proprietary interests. A branch corporation known as the Davis & Lawrence Co. of New York was organized in N. Y. City, where the head office was located in 1900. Mr. Lawrence is president of both the Davis & Lawrence Co., of New York, and the Davis & Lawrence Co., Limited, of Montreal, Canada, and also of the Fellows Manufacturing Co., of Montreal and New York, and of the Waverly Realty Co., of New York. He has virtually retired from the activities of the several companies of which he holds the presidency; he has also been devoting his time and energies to the development of a magnificent property, of which he is the owner, in Bronxville, Westchester County, N. Y., known as Lawrence Park. He is a member of the Union League Club of N. Y. City and of the St. James Club of Montreal, Can. He married, in 1867, Miss Sarah, daughter of Alfred G. Bates, of Monroe, Mich., and they have two sons and two daughters. Address, 969 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

LILLARD, Benjamin:

Pharmacist; born Kentucky, 1847, at Harrodsburg, Mercer County. At an early age he became a student of medicine, and subsequently served for a time as drug clerk. To fit himself better for this business he entered upon a course of studies at the College of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, supplemented with special courses in chemistry and botany; was graduated from it, 1867, with highest honors, and received the honorary degree of Doctor in Pharmacy from the Baltimore College. He then proceeded to Nashville, Tenn., where he engaged in the drug business, and at the same time filled the chair of Professor of Pharmacy in the Tennessee College of Pharmacy. During this time he was also editor of the Pharmaceutical Gazette, the first weekly paper for retail druggists in the country. In 1874 he gave up these positions, came East, and accepted the post of manager of the Boston Journal of Chemistry; in 1878 he removed to New York, where he assumed the management of the journal known as New Remedies, but which is now the American Druggist. For over seven years he remained connected with this journal, and the publishing house of William Wood & Co., which prospered greatly under his management. In 1885 he became the conductor of, and purchased a considerable interest in the Druggists' Circular and afterwards also in the Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter. In 1895 he purchased one of the first journals with which he had been connected, the old Boston Journal of Chemistry, then published in New York, the name having been changed to Popular Science or Popular Science News; twenty other papers have been since bought and merged into it. Having sold Popular Science News, he announced the Practical Druggist and Pharmaceutical Review of Reviews in the summer of 1896, and commenced its publication as a monthly in Jan., 1897. It was followed by the Practical Druggist Institute, a correspondence school for drug clerks, which school has been very successful. He married, in 1871, Miss Martha D. Hall, daughter of a prominent physician of Nashville. Having devoted so much of his life to the improvement and advancement of the drug business, he still takes a very active interest in Practical Druggist, which has rapidly attained a very high and prominent position among American drug journals. He was one of the originators of the American Trade Press Association and also of the N. Y. Drug Club. Address, 108 Fulton St., N. Y. City.

LINES, Amelia Wilkes, M. D.:

Is eighty years of age and, with exception of Dr. Emily Blackwell, Manhattan, is probably the oldest woman physician in the world in period of practice, having been the first woman to secure a doctor's license in the State of N. Y. Since her admission to the profession she has witnessed the dying out of the widespread objection to women as physicians, and a great increase in the number of her sisters devoted to that calling. Dr. Lines was born in Portsmouth, England, but came to this country in her youth. Her brother was a surgeon in the British navy, and she herself early displayed a liking and a gift for the healer's art, which eventually impelled her to the course of study which brought her a diploma. She has been a skillful and efficient practitioner, and has gained a wide reputation in the big city where she has lived many years; hale and active, she is still a busy woman. Dr. Lines's husband was also a physician, and her daughter and her grandson follow her footsteps and share her office with her. Address, 285 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

LITTLETON, Martin W.:

Borough president, Brooklyn; has barely passed his thirty-second birthday; born in Tennessee, on the Campbell's Station battlefield near Knoxville, his ancestry reaching far back into the history of the liberty-loving mountaineers of Tennessee, and his father having been a Federal army officer during the Civil War; when a boy of fifteen he left his father's home and struck out to make his own way of the world; he drifted across the border into Texas, and worked his way up into the Panhandle country; the railroads were then fighting their way into the Texan wilderness, and the boy still in his teens, was doing a man's work with the track gangs; working on the roads in Parker County when nineteen years of age, after he had tried his hand at setting type and had learned the trade of baker, he attracted the attention of the Prosecuting Attorney of Baker County; this official offered him a position as clerk in his office, which the young man eagerly accepted; in the Parker County Court House he studied law, and at the age of twenty was admitted to the Bar;

in a short time was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney; a few years later he moved to Dallas and began to practice in that city; became prominent at the Bar and was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney in Dallas; after his marriage to Miss Maude Wilson, of Dallas, he went to N. Y., and obtained employment as law clerk and later as lawyer in a Brooklyn law office; his eloquence in the courts attracted attention and he was retained by the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Co. to defend it in damage suits; District Attorney John F. Clarke appointed him assistant district attorney, and he summed up for the people in the case of William F. Miller, the five hundred and twenty per cent. syndicate man; became engaged thereafter in the prosecution of most of the important criminal cases which the district attorney had on hand; Mr. Clarke induced Mr. Littleton to make several campaign speeches, and these soon attracted the attention of the Democratic leaders of Brooklyn; in the Presidential campaign of 1900 he followed David B. Hill in the Academy of Music and made a speech so eloquent that Hill warmly congratulated him at its close; he had been a delegate to the State convention of that year, and in the following year he was selected by the Kings County Democrats to make the speech nominating Edward M. Shepard in the N. Y. City convention; he took a foremost part in that campaign, and in 1902 David B. Hill selected him as chairman of the Democratic State Convention; several times during the campaign that followed he toured N. Y. State, making speeches with former Senator Hill in all the large cities; against his desire—for he had elected to open a law office and get out of active politics—he was nominated in 1903 for borough president of Brooklyn, and was elected over J. Edward Swannstrom, candidate on the Fusion ticket; he is a member of the Brooklyn Club and the Crescent Athletic Club. Address, Office Borough President, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Y., Sept. 16, 1857; educated at Canton School and St. Lawrence University; studied law and for some time practiced this profession. Has always been a Republican, and served for three years as justice of the peace of Oswegatchie; elected to the Assembly, 1890; re-elected 1891. In 1892 was elected to represent the County of St. Lawrence, under the new apportionment. In the Republican caucus, at the assembling of the legislature, was the nominee for speaker, defeating the Hon. Hamilton Fish, Jr., by five votes. By virtue of which honor, he was the Republican leader on the floor. In 1893 was again elected to Assembly and returning to Albany, was nominated by acclamation in the caucus of the Republicans for speaker. Exerted his influence as speaker, among other measures, to pass the leading reformatory legislation of the session; showed a special interest in the bills to punish crimes against the purity of the ballot; to punish repeaters; reforming the ballot system, and providing for nonpartisan boards of election inspectors at the 5,000 polling places in the State. Another feature of Speaker Maltby's administration of the affairs of the Assembly was his insistence upon economical appropriations, which lead to the passing of the great financial measures of the session of 1894, with only moderate appropriations in them. He further showed a keen interest in the bills intended to bring about an improvement of the roads of the State, and to create a State Forestry Preserve in the Adirondack mountain region. As a lawyer, he also concerned himself in the bills tending to improve the judicial system of the State. In 1894, was once more a candidate for Assemblyman in St. Lawrence County. In 1895 was supported for the speakership by a large proportion of the Republican members, but failed of an election. In 1895 elected Senator in the Thirty-second District; re-elected in 1898, 1900, 1902 and 1904. In 1903 was appointed a member of the following Senate Committees: Chairman of the Finance Committee, member of the Insurance, Miscellaneous Corporations, Engrossed Bills, and Rules. MAPES, Charles V.:

Chemist. The founder of the Mapes family in America, Thomas Mapes, reached N. E. at an early date; one of the founders of Southold, L. I., 1640. Of his descendants, General Jonas Mapes, born 1786, was an officer in the army for nearly forty years; he served throughout the War of 1812, and was commissioned Major-General in 1816; his son, James J. Mapes, turned his attention to science and became famous as an analytical chemist. Charles Victor Mapes is the only surviving son of Professor Mapes, was born N. Y. City, July 4, 1836; has three sisters, Mary Mapes Dodge, the editor of the St. Nicholas, Sophy Mapes Tolles, the artist, and Catherine T. Bunnell, of San Francisco. When he was eleven years of age his father removed to Lyons Farm, N. J., where the growing boy became fond of farm life, and interested himself greatly in the application of chemistry to agriculture, and when only fourteen he had collected a small chemical laboratory. Several persons of later prominence were then studying agriculture under Professor Mapes, among them George A. Waring, author of the Elements of Agriculture, and association with these helped to develop the active intellect of the boy; 1853, entered Harvard college; he was graduated in 1857, having given his principal attention to the sciences, especially to chemistry. He proposed to enter upon a professional career after leaving college, but circumstances forced him to engage in commercial business, while at the same time assisting his father in the editing of the Working Farmer; his subsequent career was actively devoted to mercantile and manufacturing pursuits, during which he continued his studies in agricultural chemistry, giving particular attention to plant feeding. This field of study had then been little developed, and he gave much attention to it, closely investigating, and writing much on this and cognate subjects. Among his papers which attracted most widespread attention may be mentioned: Some Rambling Notes on Agriculture and Manures, Effects of Fertilizers on Different Soils, and Classification and Requirements of Crops; the last set forth the leading ingredients—ammonia, phosphoric acid and potash—of the staple crops; defined the relative importance of these in each case, and gave the sources, condition and strength of the fertilizing materials requisite for each crop. He has served as vice-president and manager of the Mapes Formula and Peruvian Guano Co. since its organization, in 1877, and has been president of the Fertilizer and Chemical Exchange since its foundation; is a director and trustee in the Martin Kalbfleisch Chemical Co. and other commercial organizations, and belongs to many social organizations of N. Y. City; president of the Theta Delta Chi Club, member of many scientific, art and historical associations. Married, in 1863, Miss Martha M. MARKHAM, Edwin:

Poet, writer and lecturer; born Oregon City, Ore., April 23, 1852, of Colonial descent. When about five years old he removed with his widowed mother to California, settling upon a stock ranch and farm near Suisun, in Solano County. Later he worked his way through the San Jose State Normal School, and the Santa Rosa College; still later he made special studies in literature and Christian Economics. Began teaching, and in 1897 while head master of the observation school of the University of California, "The Man with the Hoe" was published, and the poem immediately attracted the attention of both hemispheres. From boyhood he had been writing for newspapers and magazines, and had found entrance to the best Eastern publications; but up to the appearance of the Hoe poem, in 1897, his work had created no great popular impression. This poem, however, was hailed everywhere with varying criticism; some critics called it an insult to labor; others called it a psalm of labor and "the battle cry of the next thousand years." It was copied throughout the world; was translated into nearly every living tongue; was discussed in newspapers and preached from pulpits. In 1899 he abandoned his educational work to devote himself to literature, and with his wife and child moved to N. Y. City, where he has resided for five years. In 1897 his first book was published, The Man with the Hoe and Other Poems; in 1901 came his second book, Lincoln and Other Poems; he has also given his version of the human problem involved in the Hoe poem in a booklet, entitled The Man with the Hoe, with Notes by the Author; has also published his baccalaureate sermon on The Social Conscience, delivered at the Stanford University. Among his later prose work is A Short History of the City of San Francisco, and an article entitled The Romance of the Central Pacific; among his later poems are The Mighty Hundred Years, and a memorial-day poem, Our Deathless Dead. He is about to publish (1906) his third book of verse; also an illustrated collection of his five poems based on Millet's paintings, and entitled Field Folk: Interpretations of Millet. Address, Westerleigh, Staten Island, N. Y.

METCALFE, Henry:

Captain U. S. Army, retired; born N. Y. City, Oct. 29, 1847. On the side of his father, the late Doctor John T. Metcalfe, he is descended from a Yorkshire family said to have been among the early colonists of Virginia whence they removed to Kentucky and later to Mississippi and Louisiana. On his mother's side he comes from the Anglo-Irish family of Colles. His great-grandfather, John Colles, coming to this country in 1771 with his cousin, Christopher Colles, an eminent inventor to whom is attributed the original conception of the Erie canal, the introduction of wooden water pipes in New York, and other inventions. Was educated in private schools in Morristown, N. J., and at New Rochelle, N. Y., until his admission to the U. S. Military Academy in Aug., 1863. His stay at West Point was prolonged a year beyond the usual term of four years by illness. He was graduated in June, 1862, and was assigned to duty with the ordnance department of the army, serving here until his retirement in 1893. His most important duties were as Recorder of the Small Arms Board of 1873, a commission that, in adopting the Springfield breech-loading rifle, developed methods largely used as models for other investigations of this nature. The closely analytical nature of his report made it for some years an authority on Military small arms. In 1875 was ordered to superintend the construction of the building erected by the U. S. government at the Centennial exposition, and, at the same time, to construct and maintain the exhibit made therein by the ordnance department of the army. On the completion of the building he became the executive officer of the government departments exhibiting therein. In the meantime he had been charged with the organization of the inspection of small arms and ammunition being manufactured in great quantities in New England for the Imperial Ottoman government. His office was practically that of arbitrator between the Imperial officers and the contractors in contracts aggregating many million dollars. Friction having arisen between himself and the Imperial commissioners he was relieved from this duty at their request but he had the satisfaction of receiving the approval of his own superiors, of seeing all his recommendations carried out by the commissioners, and finally of receiving from the Imperial Ottoman government the decoration of the Osmanie many years after the quality of the arms and ammunition had been tested in the Russian-Turkish war. In his penultimate service as instructor of ordnance and gunnery at West Point he was permitted to repay in part a debt long due his Alma Mater by revising and publishing at considerable expense to himself a course of instruction in ordnance and gunnery—the first complete treatise on the subject for nearly thirty years. The severity of the application required to compose and to write this course, while, so to speak, teaching it, impaired his eye-sight so that he was retired in October, 1893. Apart from the two books he is the author of The Cost of Manufactures and the Administration of Work Shops, publicly and privately very generally used and esteemed. Since his retirement as head of the Water Commission he has introduced the water supply of Cold Spring-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., and as president of the school board he has interested himself deeply in public education. Married, in April, 1870, Harriet, daughter of John H. Nichols, Washington, D. C. Residence, Cold Spring-on-the-Hudson; office, 143 Liberty St., N. Y. City.

METCALFE, James Stetson:

Captain, commanding New York Naval Militia; born in Morristown, N. J., June 1, 1847; son of Honorable J. W. Miller, United States Senator from that State. Entered the Naval Academy Sept., 1863, graduating June, 1867. Lived the ordinary routine life of junior officer until 1872, serving on the European, Pacific, and West Indian stations; was appointed to special service in connection with the Nicaragua Inter-Ocean Canal in 1872; surveyed portion of the Western Divide and had charge of the hydrographic work on the San Juan River. He returned to Nicaragua in the Autumn of 1873 as secretary to the commission appointed by the United States government to determine which was the best route for a ship canal across the Isthmus; after competing this work he was engaged in Washington in writing the report on the Nicaragua canal. In 1875 he was ordered to the European squadron and served in the Mediterranean on board the Franklin. During winter of 1877-78 he was on board the Vandalia when General Grant visited the Levant in the course of his celebrated trip around the world. Having completed his three years of sea service in European waters he was assigned to duty at the Naval Academy as instructor of ordnance and gunnery, where he remained until 1881; in that year he was ordered once more to sea, and made his last cruise in the U. S. S. Jamestown as her navigator from San Francisco to New York, when that vessel came to the Atlantic under sail. After returning from this voyage he left the Navy and went to Kansas, where he became identified with railroad interests, and was made vice-president and general manager of the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad. He remained with this and other corporations in the West until May, 1886, when he was tended and accepted the position of general manager of the Providence & Stonington Steamship Company, and of the New York, Providence and Boston Railroad. In May, 1889, he was elected president of the Providence & Stonington Steamship Company. He is also president of the Nicaragua Company and the Newport & Wickford Railroad & Steamboat Company, and has other marine and railroad interests. He took an active part in the development of the Naval Militia of this State; was the first commander of the New York Naval Battalion at its organization in 1891, and is now captain of the Naval Militia of the State. He entered the Navy in 1898, during the Spanish-American War as lieutenant commander and had command of the Third District Auxiliary Naval Force. At the age of seventeen secured a clerkship in N. Y. In 1847, went to Buffalo, where he entered into partnership with his cousin, E. J. Townsend, and was appointed cashier, Merchant's Bank, of Erie County. Went to San Francisco, 1849; engaged in trade with the various mining districts. Later settled in Sacramento, and engaged in general mercantile business, while also buying gold-dust and dealing in exchange on New York. In Nov., 1849, closed out his business and returned to Buffalo, where he disposed of all his interests in the East, returning to Sacramento again, and founding there the house of D. O. Mills & Co., which quickly became the leading bank of interior California, a position which it holds to this day. In 1864, was elected president Bank of California, a new institution which began business that year with a capital of $2,000,000. He remained connected with it till 1873, when he resigned the presidency and retired from business. After it was wrecked by his successor he was summoned again to the bank and resumed the presidency, subscribed personally to the bank capital $1,000,000, raised in all nearly $7,000,000, and within six weeks enabled it to resume payment. In three years he again left it, after having firmly re-established its financial standing. He subsequently came East, where he became a resident of N. Y. City, and erected the great "Mills Building" in Broad St. His interests are now divided between New York and California. On leaving California he endowed with $75,000, since raised to $150,000, the Mills Professorship of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy in University of California, and donated to state handsome group of marble statuary Columbus before Queen Isabella. Brevet major U. S. Army for gallant and meritorious services in battle of Stone River; brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services during the Atlanta campaign and in the battle of Jonesboro, Ga.; brevet brigadier-general volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the war. Major-general Jefferson C. Davis, commanding Fourteenth Corps, referring to the Fourteenth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, wrote the Secretary of War as follows: "Colonel Mizner and regiment joined my command early in the campaign against Atlanta and served with distinction to its close. This regiment were among the first carried Corps under my command, and upon every occasion where the enemy was met invariably signalized its courage and discipline. In the assault of the Corps upon the enemy's works at Jonesboro, which resulted in the fall of Atlanta, the colors of This regiment was one of the best in the over the works. Colonel Mizner had been long in command of this regiment and without doubt much was due his exertion and skill in promoting that excellent discipline and spirit of gallantry for which his regiment was conspicuous throughout the war. Colonel Mizner's personal bearing on the field was no less conspicuous than that of his regiment." Retired, Aug. 1, 1891. Promoted brigadier-general, 1904. Address, 61 Pitcher St., Detroit, Mich.

MOLINEUX, Edward Leslie:

Brevet major-general U. S. Volunteers; born Oct. 12, 1833. He first became identified with the National Guard of the State of New York in 1854; subsequently joined the Brooklyn City Guard (Thirteenth Regiment) and passed through the several grades of non-commissioned rank, his membership being terminated by his acceptance of an important mission to South America. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was among the first to volunter in defence of the Union, enrolling himself as a member of the Seventh Regiment; was one of the foremost promoters of the Twenty-third Regiment of Brooklyn, when brigade inspector of the Eleventh Brigade; subsequently unanimously elected lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-third Regiment. In Aug., 1862, as lieutenant-colonel, he raised the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers; was mustered into United States service the following November as full colonel, and assigned to the Banks expedition with his regiment. He commanded a detachment of General Bank's army, protecting the right wing of the main body during the feint against Fort Hudson. On Apr. 14, 1863, during the battle of Irish Bend, Colonel Molineux was severely wounded while leading a charge. As soon as his wounds permitted he returned to active service, and participated in the various fights of the Red River campaign. He was appointed assistant inspector-general of the Department of the Mississippi; afterwards provost-marshal-general and commissioner for the exchange of prisoners. He was made military commander of the Lafourche District, La., and was assigned to the duty of organizing state troops or independent companies of Louisiana scouts. Upon the construction of the celebrated dam at Alexandria, Colonel Molineux was given command of all the U. S. forces on the north side of the Red River. After the campaign he was ordered North with his regiment, joining General Grant in the operations against Petersburg and Richmond. Organized a provisional division of the Nineteenth Army Corps and re-enforced General Sheridan in the Valley, and participated in all the engagements and battles of that campaign. He was promoted brigadier-general by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and zeal at Fisher's Hill, Winchester, and Ceder Creek. At the close of this campaign his brigade was sent to sea to re-enforce General Sherman, and General Molineux was placed in charge of the works at Savannah, of Fort Pulaski, and Tybee. He was instrumental in saving the ship Lawrence, in recognition of which the New York Board of Underwriters voted him a service of plate. He was made a military commander of the District of Northern Georgia, with head-quarters at Atlanta. He seized and secured to the United States government Confederate coin and bullion to a very large amount, over seventy thousand bales of cotton, and quartermaster and commissary stores aggregating in value ten million dollars, and government buildings and factories of great value. He returned to civil life with the rank of major-general by brevet "for gallant and meritorious services during the war." He was subsequently made major-general of the Second Division National Guard, State of N. Y.. He has contributed valuable articles to periodicals on subjects relating to physical culture in the public schools, the suppression of riots on railroads and in cities, and on various military subjects. Although he has been frequently nominated for office, he has persistently declined political preferment. MONTGOMERY, Mrs. W. A.:

President Women's Educational and Industrial Union at Rochester. The Union was organized in 1893. Its purpose is to increase fellowship among women. In order to promote the best practical methods for securing their educational, industrial and social advancement. The work of the club is done through committees; its effort is mainly along civic and educational lines. In addition to the league, protection and other work usually done by women's educational and industrial unions. It has introduced sewing and manual training into the public schools. It has placed pictures in the school rooms of the city, and cited individuals and other societies to follow its example, till there is hardly such a thing as a school room without several fine pictures and bits of plaster in it. It has fitted up an entire school building with pictures and statuary as a model school in this respect—this was done at a cost of one thousand dollars. For several years the Union has maintained vacation schools, and one summer it took charge of a summer play ground. It maintains a fine lecture course every year, for this purpose utilizing local talent and fine speakers from abroad, particularly people of educational and philanthropic renown. It has classes in bird study, art, etc., etc. The effort of the Rochester Union is not to be directly educational, but to be an inspirational force, not to continue vacation schools, but to demonstrate their utility and necessity, and thus persuade the city to maintain them; not to put pictures in all the schools, but to create such an interest and desire for art in the schools that teachers, scholars and patrons will strive to make every school room in the city an artistic center. It has for years maintained an educational committee, with a sub-committee of school visitors, one for each school, with monthly meetings, etc. The Union is doing so much for school yard improvement that Cornell University has made Rochester an experiment station; through the Union thousands of packages of seeds are distributed to the school children each spring, and in the fall large and highly successful flowers and vegetable exhibits are held, with prizes for the best exhibitions. This has stimulated other gardening clubs, and the offer of other prizes by other organizations and individuals. Address, 233 Westminster Road, Rochester, N. Y.

A. from the University of the City of N. Y. in 1880. From boyhood he had a decided inclination for medical studies and in the carrying out of this idea took a course at the University Medical College, N. Y. City, from which latter institution he obtained the degree of M. D. in 1873. Before graduating Dr. Morrow went abroad where he remained fifteen months pursuing special studies in the hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. It was in 1874, at the age of 27, that Dr. Morrow entered upon his professional career in the metropolis. Eight years later he was given a place in the faculty of the University Medical College, the Medical department of the University of the City of N. Y., holding the post of clinical lecturer on dermatology in 1882 and 1883, and becoming clinical professor of genito-urinary diseases in 1884. He is now emeritus professor in the University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College. Dr. Morrow has been visiting surgeon to Charity Hospital since 1883, and from 1884 to 1892 was consulting surgeon to Bellevue Hospital out door department. MORTON, Levi Parsons:

Former Vice-President, and former governor of the State of New York; born Shoreham, Vt., May 16, 1824; youngest son of the Rev. Daniel Oliver Morton. He is a direct descendant of George Morton, of Bawtry, Yorkshire, England, one of the Pilgrim Fathers who landed at Plymouth, Mass., from the ship Ann in 1623. Mr. Morton was educated at the Academy in his native town, and then chose a mercantile career. When twenty years old he began business at Hanover, N. H., remaining there about five years; in 1849 he became connected with the house of James M. Beebe & Co., in Boston, as a clerk, and was admitted to partnership at the same time that Mr. Morgan, the successor of George Peabody & Co., of London, joined the firm; five years later he went to New York, and established the dry goods commission house of Morton & Grinnell; in 1863 he went into the banking business, establishing one well known house of Morton, Bliss & Co., and in connection with Sir John Rose, who was at one time financial minister to Canada, he founded the house of Morton, Rose & So., of London, England. Mr. Morton was a careful student of the financial transactions of the government, and his firm was one of the syndicates which so successfully assisted in funding the national debt and making the resumption of specie payment possible at a fixed rate. The London house were the first fiscal agents of the U. S. government from 1873 until 1884, and were re-appointed in 1889. In the negotiation of the U. S. bonds and the payment of the Geneva award of fifteen million five hundred thousand dollars, and the Halifax Fishery Award of five million five hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Morton's firm was especially active; the firm of Morton, Bliss & Co. was dissolved on Oct. 1, 1899, and was succeeded by The Morton Trust Co., of which Mr. Morton was elected president, and he still fills that position. In 1878, President Hayes appointed Mr. Morton honorary commissioner of the U. S. to the Paris Exhibition, and in that same year he was elected to the Forty-sixth Congress from the Eleventh District in New York, defeating his opponent, a Tammany Democrat, by seven thousand votes; he was returned in 1880 by a largely increased vote. He represented in Congress the wealthiest district in the U. S., and in the conscientious attention to the interests of his constituency, as well as those of the State at large, found himself a very busy man; his experience in finance made him naturally a leader in this branch of legislation, and he was promptly accorded a prominent place among his associates at the national capital. He strongly opposed the unlimited coinage of silver in 1879, and characterized the measure then before the House as a "bill for the relief of owners of silver mines and silver bullion in the U. S. and Europe;" was always deeply interested in international politics and the relations of the U. S. with other countries, and served as a member of the committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-sixth Congress. The nomination for the Vice-Presidency was informally tendered Mr. Morton at Chicago in 1880, but he declined it, preferring to remain in Congress; subsequently he was given his choice between a place in the Cabinet as the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Navy, and the French Mission, and he chose the last named. His credentials were presented to the French government on Aug. 1, 1881, and the manner in which he filled that important position won for him the good opinion of the people of both that country and this; was able to secure the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of American pork to France, and was able to bring about also the recognition of American corporations in that country. Mr. Morton drove the first rivet in the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, and had the honor of accepting it for his government. He represented the U. S. at the Paris Electrical Exposition and the Sub-Marine Cable Convention; in 1885, after the inauguration of President Cleveland, he resigned his mission and returned home. At the Republican National Convention in Chicago, in 1888, Mr. Morton was nominated for the Vice-Presidency, and was inaugurated in March of the following year. As a presiding officer of the Senate he discharged his duties in a most able and impartial way. On July 14, 1881, Dartmouth College conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws, and in the following year Middleburg College remembered him with a similar honor. Mr. Morton is president and director of the Morton Trust Co., president and trustee of Fifth Avenue Trust; trustee of Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co.; director in the Guaranty Trust Co.; director in the Home

Insurance Co.; director in the Panama Coal Co., and director in the Washington Life Insurance Co. He is president of the Metropolitan and member of the Union, Union League, Lawyers, Republican and Tuxedo Clubs, the Century Association, the New England Society, the Sons of the American Revolution, and the American Geographical Society. He has been married twice; his first wife was Lucy Kimball; she died in 1871. His second wife, whom he married in 1873, is a daughter of William L. Street; she is descended from several of the old Manhattan families; her grandfather was General Randall S. Street, and her grandmother, Cornelia Livingston, a granddaughter of Robert Livingston and Alida (Schuyler) Van Rensselaer. Mr. Morton has had five children by his second wife. His eldest daughter, Edith Livingston, was married to William Corcoran Eustis, April 30, 1900; his daughter Helen was married to Count De Perigord, now Duke De Valencery, in London, in Oct., 1901, and his daughter Alice was married to Winthrop Rutherford, in Feb., 1902. Country home, Ellerslie, Rhinecliff, Rhinebeck-on-the-Hudson; residence, 681 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

MULLER, Carl C.:

Teacher of harmony, counterpoint and composition; born July 3, 1831, Meiningen, Germany. Studied music in his native town; piano, under W. F. Pfeifer and his son, Heinrich; harmony with A. Zöllner and Organ with Court Organist Butzert. Came to this country 1854 and took position in a piano factory. Was leader of the orchestra in old Barnum Museum. After a professional tour through the States, 1862-64, he settled in N. Y. City. Some of his compositions having attracted attention he was induced to give instruction in harmony. Finding the then existing text-books inadequate he translated Simon Sechter's celebrated Correct Order of Fundamental Harmonies, which reached its tenth edition. This was followed by his Tables for the Writing of Harmonic Exercises in three series and a supplement, all of which enjoy great popularity. Published songs, male quartettes, Morceaux and Children's Pieces for Piano, instructive and entertaining pieces for the violin and cello, a sonata for violin and piano, a string-quartette and three sonatas for organ. His chief composition (unpublished), a symphony in D minor, was played from the score by no less an artist than Dr. Franz Liszt, who manifested great interest for it. It was performed by Theodore Thomas's orchestra, together with other compositions. Has composed, also unpublished, a suite, two overtures, instrumental solos, an idyl for orchestra, some of which were performed by Theo. Thomas and Seldl orchestras at the Harvard Concert, Boston and at the Peabody Concert, Baltimore, a cantata founded on Schiller's poem: Die Kraniche des Ibcus, for solo, mixed chorus and orchestra, two anthems, a second string quartette, instrumental solos and a dramatic solo for tenor, founded on an excerpt from Tennyson's Maud. Member German Liederkranz, Manuscript Society, Aschenbroedel Verein, Musicians Mutual Protective Society and New York State Music Teachers' Association. Continues to teach harmony and all its associate branches. Studio, 125 East 85th St., N. Y. City.

City.

MYERS, Theodore W.:

Banker and broker; born N. Y. City, Jan. 11, 1844. Son of Lawrence Myers, a prominent merchant. Received a preparatory training for college at schools in N. Y. City, and also in France and Germany, but ill health obliged him to give up a collegiate course, and he turned his attention to business, becoming in 1864 a clerk in the banking house of Polhemus & Jackson. After a few years' experience in this establishment he became a member of the firm of Camblos & Myers, later continuing in business for some years under his own name. This was followed by a period of connection, as special partner, with the banking house of M. E. De Rivas & Co., and by a year or two of travel abroad, after which, in 1884, he organized the banking house of Theodore W. Myers & Co., of which he continues the head, doing business with branches in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago and other cities. During the Civil War he was active in organizing the Sickles Brigade, in which he served for a time as captain of its Third Regiment. For many years afterward was connected with the City Guard, and later became an officer in the Ninth Regiment of the New York State National Guard. Politically is a Democrat. In 1884 took a leading part in the Presidential campaign, organizing the Cleveland and Hendricks Stock Exchange Campaign Club, and arranging for the great down-town Democratic rally, held on the steps of the Sub-treasury building in Wall Street. In May, 1887, was appointed by Mayor Hewitt a member of the Park Commission, and was elected treasurer of that board. In the fall of the same year elected Comptroller on Democratic ticket by over forty-five thousand plurality. In 1890 elected to same office by all parties—Republican, Tammany and County Democracy, receiving two hundred and seven thousand and eleven out of a total of two hundred and thirteen thousand one hundred and ninety-nine votes. He declined further nomination. Later unanimously elected president of the Business Men's Democratic Association of N. Y. City. Among the many results of his administration may be cited his successful placing of the first loan ever made by a municipality at the low rate of two and a half per cent. Over $14,000,000 of bonds were issued at this rate, most of them being sold at a substantial premium. In 1870, Mr. Myers married Miss Rosalie Hart, a grand-daughter of Bernard Hart, a prominent merchant and citizen of fifty years ago. They have one son, a graduate of Columbia College, and a member of the banking firm. Mr. Myers has always been a liberal patron of the arts, and is a member of the Manhattan, New York, Rockaway Hunt, National Hunt, Democratic, N. Y. Yacht, Reform, N. Y. President Vassar Students' Aid Society, N. Y. City Branch. The Vassar Students' Aid Society was organized principally for the purpose of bringing former non-graduate students into touch with the college, that the Aid Society might be to the non-graduate what the Alumnæ Association is to the graduate. Realizing that the alumnæ had done much for their alma mater, and desiring to show some appreciation of the benefits derived from the college, the Vassar Aid Society directed its energies to the raising of money for loans to young women who might desire a higher education, but had not sufficient means to avail themselves of the privilege; this money has always been loaned without interest and without restriction of any kind. The New York branch, organized in 1890, raised a scholarship of $200 in 1891, and since that time has always maintained one or more scholarships at the college; one or more scholarships at the college;

1902, five scholarships, in 1903, six. Any former student, graduate or non-graduate, of any department of Vassar College, and any woman who is or has been a teacher in Vassar College, is eligible for active membership. Any other woman, interested in the aims of the society, may, on the recommendation of the committee on admission, together with a majority vote of the active members present, become an associate member. The General Society embraces thirteen branches, situated in different localities in the United States. Address, 35 West 50th St., N. Y. City.

O'BRIEN, Morgan J.:

Justice of the Supreme Court; born City of N. Y., April 28, 1852, where he has continuously resided; he studied in the public schools and subsequently at Fordham College, from which latter place he was graduated in 1872 with the degree of A. B.; in the following year entered the College of St. Francis Xavier, N. Y. City; passed an examination and attained the degree of A. M.; he thereafter entered the Law School of Columbia College, from which in two years he was graduated with the degree of L.L. B.; thereupon he opened an office for the practice of law and for some years was actively engaged in this, but notwithstanding the engrossing nature of his private practice, his interest in education led him to accept a position of trustee in public schools of the city, which office he held for many years until, being unable, on account of the amount of his legal work, to give it the necessary attention, he resigned; in addition to ordinary law practice a great part of his time was taken up in litigation affecting the corporate interests of the City of N. Y., such as the docks and water fronts, and matters before the Sinking Fund Commissioners; the knowledge thus acquired of these corporate rights led to his selection as corporation counsel to the city, which office he occupied when he was elected, in 1887, a justice of the Supreme Court; it was after his election to the latter office that he received from St. Johns College, Fordham, the degree of L.L. D.; his first three years as Supreme Court Justice were taken up with trial work and during this time he was elected to sit with a Republican Justice in the trial of election cases at Syracuse, which at the time attracted wide-spread attention, and which duty he performed with signal success; he was selected by Governor Hill to be a member of the General

Term of the Supreme Court, before which body all appeals were heard, and subsequently on the formation of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court under the new constitution of 1895 he was appointed by Governor Morton for five years a member of the Appellate Division of the First Department; upon the termination of that period, Dec. 31, 1900, he was redesignated to the same court by Governor Odell; the fact that Justice O'Brien was renominated by both parties testifies to the high position which he holds in the great City of N. Y.; he was unanimously re-elected a justice of the Supreme Court in the fall of 1901 and subsequently re-appointed by Governor Odell to sit in the Appellate Division of the First Department; he is a trustee of the N. Y. Public Library; married Miss Rose M. Crimmins; member of the Century Association, Lotos Club, Manhattan Club, Democratic Club, Catholic Club, N. Y. E. McGowan, a writer on the Tribune, to start a daily in Chattanooga, but was anticipated by Franc M. Paul, who, on May, 1877, began the Chattanooga Dispatch; was offered and accepted position of general utility man on this paper; 1878, severed his connection with the Dispatch and began publication of a Chattanooga city directory, a venture which proved a financial success; in the meantime, having been made receiver for the Dispatch, which had just failed, he took charge, paying off its entire indebtedness; July 1, 1878, bought the Chattanooga Times, and soon made this enterprise a great success; in 1896 he came to N. Y. City and was placed at the head of a company which had bought the N. Y. Times, and acquired controlling ownership; here the usual success followed his efforts; in May, 1901, purchased the Philadelphia Times, placing his brother, George W. Ochs, in charge of it; July 22, 1902, purchased the Philadelphia Public Ledger, consolidating it with The Times, 1903-04, erected Times Building; all of these papers are independent in politics and stand for the best in journalism. Residence, Tenafly, N. J.; office, 24 State St., N. Y. City.

PAINE, Willis S.:

Banker; born Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1848, being descended from an old family of New England, one of whose members, Robert Treat Paine, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. His father, Nicholas E. Paine, was a leading lawyer of Rochester, where he filled the positions of mayor, district attorney for the county and president of the Board of Educations; at the time of his death, in 1887, he was president of the Dakota R. R. Co. Mr. Paine's mother, Abby M. Sprague, was a descendant of Governors Bradford and Prince, of Massachusetts Bay Colony. Mr. Paine was educated at the Rochester Collegiate Institute, where he was graduated in 1864 as valedictorian of his class, and at Rochester University, where he was graduated with honors in 1868. While at the latter institution he was also engaged in the study of law in the office of Sanford E. Church, afterwards chief justice of the Court of Appeals; was admitted to practice in 1869, and continued to practice until 1874, when he received an appointment as one of the trust company examiners of the State of New York; his work in this position was an investigation of the trust companies of the State, the result of his action being the closing of three such companies in N. Y. City, whose debt to depositors was $6,000,000. His action brought him high commendation from the press. He was reappointed examiner the following year. This work changed permanently his field of labor; in 1876 he was appointed receiver of the Bond Street formerly the Atlantic Savings Bank, whose failure was the largest of its kind in this country. Mr. Paine handled the responsible duty thus intrusted to him with remarkable skill, and eventually succeeded in paying the preferred creditors the full amounts of their claims, and eighty-six and five-eighths per cent. to the general creditors—a result rarely equaled. The court, in reviewing his management of this institution, declared "that the duties of this trust have been administered by the receiver with rare diligence, fidelity and discretion." In 1880, Mr. Paine and William Dowd, president of the Bank of North America, were appointed by Governor Cornell commissioners to compile and revise the laws of New York respecting banking. They served in this duty without pay, and spent less than half the sum appropriated for expenses. The revision which they prepared and submitted was adopted by the Legislature in 1882; in the following year these commissioners received vote of thanks from the Legislature for their services, being the first vote of thanks given by that body since the end of the Civil War. He was appointed by Governor Cleveland superintendent of the banking department of the State of New York, the nomination being unanimously confirmed by the Senate. This position was one of great responsibility and varied duties, embracing the supervision of the many banks, savings institutions, trust, mortgage and safe deposit companies, building associations throughout the State. He resigned the position of bank superintendent in 1889 to accept the post of president of the State Trust Co.; this corporation enjoyed great prosperity under his management; he resigned the presidency of this institution by reason of ill health and made a trip around the world; he is now the president of the Consolidated National Bank of N. Y. City. Author: Paine's Banking Laws, a new edition of which, the fifth, has just been issued; it is the standard publication; he also wrote Paine's Building and Loan Associations; Summary of Failed Savings Banks, etc. He has delivered a number of addresses before the American Bankers' Association at its annual conventions. In 1885 he was offered by President Cleveland, but declined, the position of sub-treasurer in N. Y. City; in 1886 he was given the honorary degree of LL. D. by Manhattan College; he is president of the Rochester University Alumni Association. He was appointed colonel by Governor Flower upon the latter's staff. He has long been a member of the Bar, Mayflower and Theta Delta Chi (president) Associations, the Chamber of Commerce, and belongs to the Tuxedo, Meropolitan, Lawyers, Brokers, and Phi Beta Kappa Clubs, of N. Y. City. The "block system" in real estate transfers, adopted by the New York Legislature, owes much to his efforts; the law regulating trust compaies was prepared by him. Address, 56 Broadway, N. Y. City.

PALLACE, John, Jr.:

PALMER, Albert M.:

Theatrical manager; born North Stonington, Conn., July 20, 1838; educated at the University of New York; and was graduated from its law school in 1860. For a time he continued the study of the profession, but was soon called to the responsible position of secretary to Mr. Barney, collector of the port of New York. In 1866 he was made librarian of the Mercantile Library, at that time a centre of literary interest and activity, and there he established order and effectiveness in all its branches. It was from this atmosphere of literature that he was unexpectedly drawn into the management of the Union Square Theatre, whose proprietor, Mr. Sheridan Shook, finding his establishment in a state of decadence, and knowing of Mr. Palmer's business efficiency, offered to give him full charge, and to permit him to develop the house on his own lines; on these conditions the offer was accepted. Within two years the little considered and almost abandoned Union Square Theatre became the most thronged and profitable house in town. Dion Boucicault's adaptation of Led Astray was one of the first productions under the new management, and in 1874 the triumph of The Two Orphans brought the house to the height of prosperity and recognition. Bronson Howard made his first financial success at this house, and Bartley Campbell was started on his brief and brilliant career. In 1882, Mr. Palmer retired from the management, feeling the need of rest, but was immediately sought out by Mr. Mallory, of the Madison Square Theatre, and shortly afterwards entered on the management of that house, which he controlled in every particular; with his usual success in securing a notable play, it was not long before the town was delighted with the production of Jim the Penman. Following this came Saints and Sinners, Elaine, and many other plays that sustained the prestige of his management; the closing piece of his direct management of the house was Alabama. During his career he has brought many stars to this country, while numbers of distinguished actors have passed under his management. Mr. Palmer has been president of the Actors Fund since 1888, and is a member of the Goethe Society, the Players Club, the Union League Club, etc. Address, Players Club, N. Y. City.

PALMER, Horatio Richmond:

Writer and composer; born Sherburne, N. Y., April 26, 1834. His sister taught him to read music when he was six years old; subsequently he pursued his studies of music and the languages under various teachers in N. Y., Berlin, Germany, and Florence, Italy. The degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon him by the University of Chicago in 1881, and by the Alfred University in 1882. He began his professional work in the Rushford Academy, N. Y., where he met and married Miss Lucia A. Chapman, a student in that institution. For a time Dr. Palmer was engaged in church work and publishing in Chicago. The plates of six of his books were melted in the great fire, soon after which he returned to N. Y. City. Dr. Palmer is a man of diversified abilities and has won distinction in many departments of music. He has attained the high position he fills through great energy in putting forth correct methods. He has composed much sacred music; is called the poet-musician, since he has in so many instances written both the words and music of his popular pieces; among these are his widely known hymns, Yield not to Temptation; Beautiful Home; The Rose of Sharon; Holy Spirit From Above; Galilee, Blue Galilee; Peace Be Still; Come Close to the Savior, etc. His music is distinguished for grace, purity and melodiousness; he has fine musical taste and rare sagacity in handling the difficult problems of church music. The most popular of his class-books are The Song Queen and The Song King; among his theoretical works are Theory of Music; Class Method; Manual for Teachers; Piano Primer; Dictionary of Musical Terms; Biographical Dictionary, etc. His text-books and theoretical works have been extremely successful; he has written and compiled variously more than fifty volumes in the interest of music. The Church Choral Union of N. Y. City was organized by Dr. Palmer, and he was its director for seven years. This organization represented upwards of two hundred churches, with an aggregate of more than twenty thousand pupils; at one of his mammoth concerts in Madison Square Garden he had nearly four thousand singers on the stage; it was the largest organization of the kind in the country. He conducted the musical festival seventeen years at Cortland, N. Y.; has been called into most of the States of the Union to lecture, conduct assemblies, festivals, societies, etc. During fourteen years Dr. Palmer was dean of the Chautauqua Summer School of Music and director of the great choir; has been choir master in the Broome Street Tabernacle during the last ten years, and is the president of the Clef Club of N. Y. City. Accompanied by Mrs. Palmer, he has visited Europe three times, once having extended his travels into the Orient; has spent nearly three years in the different musical and art centres of the Old World. Dr. Palmer owns a beautiful home overlooking the Hudson and commanding an extended view of the river and the Palisades. For this pleasant retreat he owes much to his wife, Mrs. Lucia A. Palmer, who chose the situation, drew the plans for the house, watched its construction, laid out the grounds, and superintended the shrubbery and tree planting. Address, C. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y. City.

PARKER, Alton Brooks:

Democratic jurist; born Cortland, N. Y., May 14, 1852. Educated in the Academy and Normal School, Cortland, N. Y. Subsequently studied law at Albany Law School, graduating in 1872 with the degree of LL.B. Upon being admitted to the Bar formed a partnership with W. S. Kenyon, Jr., practicing at Kingston, N. Y., for a number of years. 1877, elected surrogate of Ulster County, and re-elected in 1883. Daniel Manning, Democratic state leader, advised him, in 1883, to be a candidate for Secretary of State, but he would not; 1884, delegate to Democratic National Convention which nominated Grover Cleveland to the Presidency. In 1885, as Chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, managed the campaign of David B. Hill, Democratic candidate for the governorship, who was elected over Ira Davenport. Refused appointment of First Assistant Postmaster General in 1885. Declined proposition submitted at council of leaders in 1885 that he be a candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Fall of 1885, appointed by Governor Hill Justice of the Supreme Court to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. T. R. Westbrook; 1886, elected Justice of the Supreme Court for the full term, without opposition; 1889, appointed to the Second Division of the Court of Appeals; 1891, discussed in public prints and by leaders for Governor, but as soon as discussion reached the stage to justify it, he declined, through the interview of a friend to be considered. Favored for the U. S. Senate, same year, in the event that David B. Hill should refuse to be a candidate, but the suggestion was not acceptable to Judge Parker. In 1893 he was assigned to the General Term, First Department, (N. Y. City), by Governor Flower. March, 1897, assigned to the Appellate Division, First Department, (N. Y. City), in place of Mr. Justice Barrett, by Governor Black. Fall, 1897, nominated and elected Chief Judge N. Y. Court of Appeals, majority, 60,889. (President McKinley's in 1896 having been 268,469); 1901, Honorary Chancellor and LL.D., Union College; 1902, he again refused to be a candidate for Governor, when otherwise he would undoubtedly have been nominated. July 9, 1904, received the Democratic nomination for President on first ballot at St. Louis, Mo. Same day sent to the Convention his famous gold telegram. Shortly after his nomination at St. Louis, he resigned his position as Chief Judge of the N. Y. Court of Appeals. At the close of the campaign he resumed the practice of law and took offices in N. Y. City. 1873, married Mary Louise, daughter of Moses I. Schoonmaker, a descendant of Joachim Schoonmaker, one of the early Dutch settlers in Ulster County, N. Y. A son, John Parker, died in infancy. His only daughter, Bertha, is married to Rev. Charles Mercer Hall. Residence, Rosemount, Esopus, N. Y.

(Bunnell) Phelps; prepared for Yale at Hillhouse High School, and was graduated in the class of 1885, receiving the degree of Master of Arts from Yale in 1902. While in college he wrote for various newspapers; was employed on the New Haven Palladium for about one year after graduation, and acted as correspondent for many newspapers in all sections of the country, and in 1886 removed to N. Y. City, and there served in various capacities for several years on staffs of the New York World, Times, Herald, and Mail and Express, incidentally acting as night editor of the local bureau of the Associated Press for about one year, extensively contributing to various syndicates, and for several months being associated with the well known artist, the late C. De Grimm, as editor of the De Grimm Syndicate. Was financial secretary and a trustee of the New York Press Club in 1889-91, and in 1892 was a delegate to the annual convention of the International League of Press Clubs at San Francisco. In 1890 resigned from the Mail and Express staff in order to inaugurate a syndicate service of Club News and Gossip in all the New York Sunday newspapers; for two years devoted his entire time to that specialty, and contributed articles on club subjects to various newspapers and magazines. In 1894 founded the monthly insurance journal, originally known as Thrift, but latterly published under the name of The American Underwriter, and has since edited and published that paper, becoming president of the Thrift Publishing Co. in 1899. In 1898 compiled and published the first study of War Risks ever published in this country, and in 1901 supplemented that work with one issued under title of Tropical Hazards. In 1899 began compilation of an international cyclopædia on the subject of the best clubs of the civilized world, and has since labored on those lines. The work in question is in press and will be published in the early months of 1905 in two imperial quarto volumes under the title of Phelps' Universal Club-Book, and in addition to complete sketches of the history and distinctive character of each of the seven hundred leading clubs of the world and views of about one hundred of these clubs specially taken for the purpose, will contain the first exhaustive sociological study of The Origin and Evolution of the Modern Club ever attempted on either side of the Atlantic. D. from Long Island College Hospital in 1880; received the degrees of A. M. and Ph.D. from Illinois Wesleyan University in 1887, and L.H.D. from Allegheny College in 1902. Immediately upon his graduation in medicine he became managing editor of the Annals of Anatomy and Surgery, of Brooklyn, N. Y., which position he retained until 1883, when he entered the medical department of the U. S. Army as an assistant surgeon, and passing through the grades of lieutenant and captain in the regular service and major and brigade surgeon in the volunteer service, was retired for disability incurred in the line of duty in 1900. During this period he experienced considerable active service in the field against the Sioux, Crow and Cheyenne Indians and against Mexican insurrectos; was the author of the first system of drill for the U. S. Army Hospital Corps, published in the U. S., and his work on First Aid in Illness and Injury (the first edition of which was issued in 1892) has maintained its position as the principal textbook for instruction of the hospital corps from its publication to the present time. In 1896 he was appointed assistant secretary of the Association of Military Surgeons of the U. S., becoming secretary and editor in 1897—a position which, with an interval of two years, he has held to the present time; established the journal of the Association of Military Surgeons of the U. S. as a quarterly in 1901, and as a monthly in 1902. Was surgeon of one of the first regiments of the army to be ordered South at the opening of the Spanish-American War, and he served in that capacity at Mobile and at Tampa, going thence to Jacksonville as chief surgeon of the forces under Major-General Lawton. When these forces were formed into the Seventh Army Corps, under the command of Major General Fitzhugh Lee, he remained with them in the capacity of executive and medical supply officer until the fall of 1899, when he was detached and placed in command of the Army Medical Supply Depot established at Savannah, Ga.,—a duty which occupied his attention until failing health required him to relinquish active service. In addition to this service as military surgeon, he from time to time occupied the chairs of military surgery in the Ohio Medical University, Starling Medical College and Creighton Medical College; also for a time acted as professor of sociology and political economy in Dickinson College and as professor of medical jurisprudence in Dickinson School of Law and directed the cataloguing of the Libraries of the Military Service Institution and of the State of Pennsylvania in 1889 and 1899 respectively. Member Military Service Institution of the U. S., Sons of the American Revolution, and the Order of Foreign Wars of the U. S.; active in Masonic and other fraternal circles, and is a Fellow or member of numerous scientific bodies. Was commissioned second lieutenant in the Ordnance Corps, and for three months served as instructor in artillery. After the outbreak of the Rebellion he at once came into active service, taking part in Oct., 1861, in the expedition against Port Royal, and subsequently, as first lieutenant, in the operations for the reduction of Fort Pulaski. Here he was promoted captain for gallant and meritorious conduct. In July, 1862, he was appointed chief of ordnance of the Army of the Potomac, and as such served in the battle of Antietam. Was afterwards transferred to the same position in the Army of the Ohio, and was subsequently in the Army of the Cumberland, being now appointed captain and assigned to general staff duty on the field. He distinguished himself in the hard-fought battle of Chickamauga, and for a conspicuous act of gallantry received the Congressional Medal of Honor, and while serving on the staff of General Thomas at Chattanooga first met General Grant, with whom he was afterwards so closely associated. In 1864 made aide-de-camp on General Grant's staff, with the rank of lieutenant colonel. As such took part in the series of battles in the overland march to Richmond, was made major in the regular army for gallant conduct in the battle of the Wilderness, and lieutenant colonel at Spottsylvania, and colonel at New Market Heights for similar gallantry. During remainder of the war he was a close companion of General Grant, being with him in his rush through the lines after the failure of the mine before Petersburg, to withdraw the imperiled troops, and attending him in all the subsequent events till the surrender at Appomattox. He was promoted brigadier general in Feb., 1865, and was one of the small group present on the surrender of General Lee. After the war he made a tour of the South, which was followed by a valuable report on the condition of the freedmen. He subsequently accompanied General Grant in his tour of the Northwestern States. Afterwards engaged in military duties, served as Assistant Secretary of War under Grant, and in 1869 became President Grant's private secretary. In 1873 resigned from the army to accept the position of vice-president of the Pullman Palace Car Co. In 1875 he was made chairman of the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Elevated Ry., in which he was largely interested financially. He subsequently became connected as a director with numerous railroad enterprises and with the Equitable Life Assurance Society and the Continental National Bank. He was also president of the West Shore and the St. Louis and San Francisco R. R. Co. In 1897 was appointed U. S. Ambassador to France, and resigned that position April 30, 1905. Is member of all the most important N. Y. City clubs; is president of several military societies, of the Union League Club and the Grant Monument Association. For the latter he raised $400,000 to build a fitting monument for General Grant, his dead chief and comrade. In 1894 received the degree of LL. D., from Union College. In 1904 received from the French Government the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor. Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, the highest grade of that order. Address, 277 Madison Ave., N. Y. City.

POTTER, Henry C., D. D.:

The seventh Protestant Episcopal bishop of the diocese of New York; born Schenectady, N. Y., May 25, 1834, being the son of the Rev. Alonzo Potter, consecrated bishop of Pennsylvania in 1845, and nephew of Rev. Horatio Potter, who became bishop of N. Y. City in 1861. Mr. Potter received his early education in the Philadelphia Academy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and thence entered the Theological Seminary near Alexandria, Va., from which he was graduated in 1857. He was immediately made deacon, and one year later was ordained to the priesthood. From his entry on the diaconate until May 15, 1859, he was in charge of Christ Church, at Greensburg, Pa. He was subsequently transferred to St. John's Church, of Troy, N. Y., in charge of which parish he remained for seven years. At the end of this period he was installed as assistant rector at the famous Trinity Church, of Boston, where he served for two years. His next field of duty was as rector of an equally well-known church, Grace Church, N. Y. City, of which he assumed pastoral charge in May, 1868, a post of duty which he continued to occupy for the succeeding sixteen years. During this period several flattering offers came to him. In 1863 he was chosen president of Kenyon College, Gambler, Ohio, by a vote of its trustees. This position he declined, and at a later date (1875) declined another offer more in the line of his profession, that of Bishop of Iowa. His uncle, Bishop Horatio Potter, of the diocese of New York, feeling, in 1883, unfitted to perform all the duties devolving upon him, proffered a request for an assistant bishop to the Diocesan Convention. This request of the aged bishop was immediately complied with by the election of his nephew as assistant bishop. The consecration of the newly elected bishop took place on Oct. 20, 1883, in the presence of forty-three bishops and nearly three hundred clergymen, who were assembled at the general convention. Mr. Potter's long connection as rector with Grace Church ceased in Jan., 1884, though he was still to remain related to his old parish in his new capacity as bishop, which office he immediately assumed. Bishop Horatio Potter being unable to perform any of the duties of the office, he was soon obliged to retire from active labor in the diocese, all of whose duties now fell to the care of his assistant. On Jan. 2, 1887, the aged bishop died. His nephew now became the head of the see, a position which he has since that date continued to fill. The diocese over which he has episcopal control is the largest in population of any in the U. S. Its population is over two millions, and within its boundaries are more than two hundred parishes and churches and over three hundred and fifty clergy, while the number of communicants is in excess of fifty-four thousand. The annual contributions of the diocese amount to over $3,000,000. In 1866, Bishop Potter was appointed secretary of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and continued to perform the duties of that office until his election to the bishopric in 1883. Since his graduation, several honorary degrees have been conferred upon him by colleges. These include the degree of A. M., and subsequently that of D. D. from Union College, of LL. D. from the University of Cambridge, England; of D. D. from the University of Oxford, England; of D. D. from Harvard University and of LL. D. from Yale University, the last given on the occasion of its Bi-Centennial. Address, 113 W. 40th St., N. Y. City.

PRENDERGAST, William A.:

Born Manhattan Borough, N. Y. City, May 25, 1867; is a direct descendant from a patriotic Irish family, who took a prominent part in the Irish Revolution of 1798, and not long thereafter sought refuge in America, occupying since that time places of distinction in New York and other States; was an attendant at the public schools of New York and Brooklyn and at an early age began work for himself, his first venture being that of a boy helper in a wholesale mercantile warehouse. While he was yet a young man he became identified with a number of important interests, in which he secured a thoroughly practical knowledge of finance. Mr. Prendergast is known throughout the country as an instructor and educational leader on business questions; he is probably best recognized as one of the inceptors of the National Association of Credit Men, of which he is secretary and treasurer; is also a leading and eloquent speaker on business topics and economic problems, and his capabilities in his chosen field have been very substantially recognized. He has figured quite prominently, also, in politics, having been a Republican nominee for Representative in Congress, and there are few men who have a larger acquaintance in both political parties. Member Montauk Club, of Brooklyn, and several leading political clubs, and is also prominent in the more notable Catholic organizations of the metropolis. Address, 22 Pine St., N. Y. City.

RAINES, John:

State Senator; Republican, representing the Forty-second Senate district, which covers the counties of Ontario and Wayne. His father, of the same name, was a prominent Methodist clergyman, well known in the western part of the State; the father had several sons who had distinguished public careers: Thomas Raines, who was State treasurer two terms; George Raines, who was Senator from the Monroe district in 1878-79, and the subject of this sketch, who was successively Assemblyman, Senator, Congressman and Senator. John Raines was educated in the common schools, and was graduated from the law department of the Union University; his present business is that of an insurance agent and lawyer. Mr. Raines began the practice of law in Geneva soon after graduating, but in the fall of 1861 he raised a company of volunteers and was commissioned captain of Company G, of the Eighty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers; served in the Army of the Potomac and in North Carolina until July, 1863, when he returned to Geneva and resumed the practice of law. In 1867 he removed to Canandaigua and opened a law office and insurance agency there. He early joined the Republican party and has continued to be one of its members; in 1880 was elected an Assemblyman and in 1881 he was a member of the Assembly committees on General Laws, Internal Affairs, and State Charitable Institutions; reelected in 1881, he was a member in 1882 of the committees on Insurance and State Prisons; in 1885 he was chairman of the committee on Militia and a member of the committee on General Laws and of a special committee on Code Revision of the Statutes. Mr. Raines was a member of the Assembly until 1886, when he became a member of the State Senate, and continued a member of that body until 1890. While a member of the Senate he was elected to the Fifty-first Congress and was also elected to the Fifty-second Congress. In December, 1894, he was elected a State Senator from the Twenty-sixth district to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Charles T. Saxton, who had been elected lieutenant-governor; he was re-elected to the Senate in 1895, receiving 11,584 votes. J. Henry Metcalf, his Democratic opponent, received 8,093; Enoch O. Marsh, the Prohibition candidate, received 590 votes, and Herbert G. Randall, Populist, 208. Mr. Raines, in 1896, 1897 and 1898, was chairman of the committee on Railroads, and also a member of the Finance, Insurance, and Rules committees, and holds the same positions in the present Senate. His chief legislative achievement has been the passage of the present Election Law of the State and the well known Raines Liquor Tax Law, of which the receipts up to Sept. 30, 1901, from April 30, 1896, were $73,504,425.93. As the Republican candidate for Senator in 1898 he received 12,815 votes to 9,098 cast for Patrick J. White, Democrat; nominated for a fifth time for State Senator in 1900. In 1901 Mr. Raines was once more appointed chairman of the committee on Railroads, and was also appointed a member of the following committees: Finance, Insurance and Rules; and upon the death of Hon. C. R. Parsons, in 1901, he was chosen chairman of the committee on Insurance; re-appointed in 1902 chairman of the committee on Railroads, and also was appointed member of the committee on Insurance, of the committee on Finance, and of the committee on Rules. He was elected to the present Senate by a plurality of 5,284 over George P. Price, Democrat. Mr. Raines as president pro tem. and Republican leader, by vote of the Senate was made chairman of the committee on Rules and a member of the Finance Committee, the Cities Committee, and the Judiciary Committee. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1904. Address, Canandaigua, N. Y.

REID, Whitelaw:

Editor and diplomat; born Oct. 27, 1837, near Xenia, O., of which town his father, a strict Covenanter, was one of the founders. Mr. Reid was educated at the Miami University, which he was graduated from in 1855. He very early in his career entered into political and newspaper life, making speeches for the Republican party in the Frémont campaign, when not yet twenty years of age, and becoming editor of the Xenia News; soon after became widely known as a ready and able writer, by his brilliant letters to the Cincinnati Gazette, signed "Agate." He was thus engaged at the opening of the Civil War, his letters attracting attention alike from their vigorous style and their trustworthy information; took part in the war as a volunteer aide-de-camp to General Morris, and afterwards to General Rosecrans in the West Virginia campaign of 1861; later he served as war correspondent with the Army of the Cumberland and the Army of the Potomac, and was present at the battles of Shiloh and Gettysburg. In 1863 he received the appointment as librarian of the House of Representatives at Washington, in which he remained until 1866, contributing meanwhile Washington correspondence to the Cincinnati Gazette, of which he had become one of the proprietors; after the war he made a journey through the South, and for some time tried cotton planting in Louisiana and Alabama. The results of his observations while thus engaged were embodied in a book entitled After the War, which was published in 1866. For two years he was engaged in writing a book entitled Ohio in the War; this was published in 1868, and is esteemed as of much historical value. Mr. Reid's connection with the Tribune began in 1868, in which year he was invited by Horace Greeley to come to N. Y. City and accept an editorial position upon that paper. His ability in this field soon made itself so manifest that he was quickly advanced to the post of managing editor, in which he showed much skill and activity in gathering news, and came into such favor with Mr. Greeley that, when in 1872 he accepted the nomination for the Presidency, he put the whole control of the paper in Mr. Reid's hands; it has remained there ever since. On the death of Mr. Greeley, which took place immediately after the 1872 Presidential election, Mr. Reid succeeded him as editor-in-chief, and also became the principal owner of the paper; as such he has made the Tribune a leading exponent of the principles of the Republican party, and it has remained from that time to this one of the most vigorous and influential organs of the party. His Memorial of Horace Greeley, an interesting biographical sketch of his late friend and chief, was published in 1873. In 1878 Mr. Reid was chosen by the Legislature of the State regent for life of the University of New York; was subsequently twice offered the post of minister to Germany—by President Hayes and afterwards by President Garfield—but in both instances he declined; later, in President Harrison's administration, he accepted the French embassy, a post which he filled with honor and dignity, the public appreciation of his services abroad being expressed in dinners by the Chamber of Commerce, the Ohio Society, the Lotos Club, and other organizations on his return home. The Chamber of Commerce elected him an honorary member, a mark of respect which had been bestowed on only fifteen other men during the century of the chamber's existence. Shortly afterwards he was chosen as chairman of the Republican State Convention, held to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention of 1892; this convention, after nominating General Harrison as its candidate for the Presidency, asked the New York delegation to name a candidate for Vice-President. Mr. Reid was named, and was accepted by a unanimous vote of the convention; his letter of acceptance, and the several speeches which he afterwards made, were among the most effective contributions to the literature of the campaign. Was special ambassador of the U. S. to Queen Victoria's Jubilee, 1897; member peace commission to Paris for negotiation of Peace Treaty with Spain, securing Porto Rico, Guam and Philippines, 1898; special ambassador to coronation of Edward VII., 1902; Chancellor of University of the State of New York, 1904. In March, 1905, Mr. Reid was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Court of St. James. Author: After the War, (1867); Ohio in the War, (1868); Newspaper Tendencies, (1874); Town Hall Suggestions, (1881); Our New Duties, (1899); Our New Interests (1900); Problems of Expansion (1900); The Monroe Doctrine, the Polk Doctrine and Anarchism, (1903); The Thing to Do, a Phi Beta Kappa address, etc. Residence, 451 Madison Ave., N. Y.

City, and Ophir Hall, Purchase, Westchester County, N. Y.

REMINGTON, Frederic:

Artist; born Canton, N. Y., 1861; was educated at the Yale Art School and the New York Art Students League; clerked in a store, lived as a cowboy and stockman on a Western ranch and subsequently became an illustrator for magazines. In Collier' Weekly Owen Wister has recently published these words about Mr. Remington: "Is it necessary to mention the things that Remington stands for? No artist until Remington has undertaken to draw so clearly the history of the people. This is surely enough; but he stands for certain other things, both great and definite. He has pictured the red man as no one else, to my thinking certainly, has pictured him. He has told his tragedy completely. He has made up see at every stage this inferior race which our conquering race has dispossessed, beginning with its primeval grandeur, and ending with its squalid degeneration under the influence of our civilized manners. Next, while recording the red man in this way, Remington has recorded the white man who encountered him—recorded this man also in every stage from dignity to sordid squalor. Pioneers, trappers, cowboys, miners, prospectors, gamblers, bandits—the whole motley rout goes ineffaceably into Remington's pages. And, finally, he has not forgotten Nature herself. The mystery of the untouched plains and the awe of the unscaled mountain heights have been set down by him not only truthfully, but with potent feeling and imagination. Remington is not merely an artist; he is a national treasure. And if ever it should occur to the not always discerning minds of academic institutions that Remington should be crowned at their hands, I should like to hear him receive his degree in these words: 'Frederic Remington, Draughtsman, Historian, Poet.'" Address, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Address, 500 Fifth Ave, N. Y. City.

RENWICK, Edward Sabine:

Mechanical engineer; born Jan. 3, 1823, in old Columbia College, formerly Kings College, in N. Y. City; he being one of the few persons born in that old building; son of James Renwick, LL.D., professor of chemistry and natural philosophy, and Margaret Ann Brevoort. He entered Columbia College in 1834, and graduated in 1839. His first employment was in iron manufacture, and in 1845 he became superintendent of the Wyoming Iron Works at Wilkes Barre, Pa., where merchant iron, sheet iron, hoops, rods and nails were manufactured; in 1847 he put up a blast furnace at the same place in connection with his brother, H. B. Renwick. The manufacture of iron under the Walker tariff became unprofitable, and in 1849 Mr. Renwick went to Washington and associated himself with Peter H. Watson (subsequently assistant secretary of war under President Lincoln) in the business of solicitor of patents and expert in patent causes. While thus engaged they jointly invented the original self-binding reaping machine, without which the present grain crops of the world could not be reaped; their inventions were patented in 1851 and 1853. The invention was twenty years in advance of the age, and was ridiculed, although it has since come into enormous use; hence the inventors never were compensated for it. A complete break down in health compelled Mr. Renwick to give up professional business for several years; but in 1854 removed to New York and again resumed his profession, and has probably been engaged as expert in a greater number of patent causes than any other expert. Mr. Renwick has made many inventions; among them is that of encasing the tail shafts of twin propellers in cylindrical casings extended from the hull of the vessel to the after bearing; this is described in his English Patents of 1862 and 1868, but did not come into use until the accident to the City of Paris many years later; now it is used on all the large twin propeller steamships. Mr. Renwick amused himself with artificial incubation and made many improvements in incubators; he has also revolutionized the bringing up of chickens by the invention of the Brooder. Mr. Renwick's most notable achievement as an engineer was the repair of the Great Eastern steamship in 1862, plating over a fracture eighty-two feet long and ten feet broad on the turn of the bilge twenty-seven feet below water, while the vessel was swinging at anchor in the rapid tide of the East River. He is the author of a work on Practical Inventions. He was married in 1862, to Alice Brevoort, and has three children. Address, 39 West 27th St., N. Y. City.

REUTERDAHL, Henry:

Marine painter and illustrator; born Malmo, Sweden, Aug. 12, 1870; no art education; came to U. RHOADES, Henry Eckford:

Lieutenant U. S. Navy; born N. Y. City, June 15, 1844. received his early education in the public schools of N. Y. City and in 1858 began to study medicine; but a year later decided to become an engineer. While an apprentice in the Allaire Works, N. Y. City, he took a special course in mechanical and civil engineering, and before he finished assisted in building the engines of the Shamrock, Puritan, Dictator, and other vessels. In the early part of the Civil War he served in the army on the staff of the surgeon-in-chief of the Army Hospitals, Frederick City, Md. On Feb. 11, 1865, he received his commission as third assistant engineer in the volunteer navy, and after the war, in Dec., 1866, started on a cruise in the Asiatic Squadron, and was at the opening of the ports of Hiogo, Osaka, and Kobe, Japan, on Jan. 1, 1868. During the Japanese rebellion, when Prince Hizen's men fired on the foreign sailors in the streets of Hiogo, he was in command of one of the companies sent on shore, and led the engineer contingent into the mountains close to the rear of the Japanese force. The forces from the foreign vessels were kept on shore several days, during which time Mr. Rhoades assisted in building up earthworks around the American legation. He received an honorable discharge from the volunteer navy April 22, 1869, and on Feb. 25, 1871, after a competitive examination, received his commission of second assistant engineer in the regular navy. He was placed on the retired list on Dec. 31, 1874. In 1869 he married Miss Sarah M. Stone, a descendant of Samuel Stone, the founder of Hartford, Conn. A son, Winfred C., is a Congregational clergyman, and his daughter is the wife of a Presbyterian minister. In 1889, he was offered the consulship at Yokohama by Secretary Blaine, but declined because of an opinion by the attorney-general that to accept would mean resignation of his navy commission; in 1892 was offered the Republican nomination for Congress from the Sixteenth New York district, but declined it; 1893 was elected a member of the Board of Education of Mount Vernon, N. Y., and in 1894 was re-elected for the long or four years' term. He was also one of the founders of the Mount Vernon Public Library, in 1896, and has been continued as one of the trustees. He was employed on the staff of the N. Y. Tribune for several years, as marine reporter, commercial reporter, assistant city editor, and in 1893 he was made editor of the Tribune Almanac. On April 27, 1898, he was detailed for duty at the Mount Vernon, N. Y., and Navy Yard, N. Y. Navy Yard, during the Spanish War, and in Nov., 1903, was again detailed for duty at that yard. ROBERTS, George H., Jr.:

Postmaster of Brooklyn, N. Y.; born Rochester, N. Y., 1852; at the age of ten he went with his family to St. Louis and there received his early education. When fourteen years old he removed to Brooklyn, where, with the exception of a year spent in study in Germany, at Dresden, he has ever since resided; before going to Germany he pursued a course of study at the Polytechnic Institute. Returning to Brooklyn in 1873 he entered into the employ of Roberts & Collin, flour merchants of New York, and years ago succeeded his uncle, George H. Roberts, as a member of the firm. For a number of years Mr. Roberts has been a member of the New York Produce Exchange; is a trustee of the Emmanuel Baptist Church, a charter member of the old Franklin Literary Society, and is prominently identified with Union League Club and Marine and Field Club. Was married in 1878 and has two children, a son, a sophomore at Yale, and a daughter, who was graduated from Vassar. In politics he has always been a Republican; was a delegate to the St. Louis and Philadelphia Conventions which nominated McKinley, and before going on that fatal visit to Buffalo, the martyred President had promised, not only on the score of party service, but also on that of personal friendship, to appoint Mr. Roberts to the postmastership. He was appointed by President Roosevelt and his nomination readily confirmed by the Senate in Dec., 1901. At the time of his appointment Mr. Roberts was chairman of the Republican City Committee of the Greater New York, a position which he has since resigned. Address, Post Office, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROBERTSON, Joseph L.:

Banker, broker and dealer in investments; born on the old family estate in Montgomery County, Ky., Oct. 4, 1838. The Robertson family were prominent among the early settlers of Kentucky and Tennessee. On the maternal side Mr. Robertson's line is derived from old Huguenot nobility of France. His early education was obtained in his native town. Appointed to Military Academy at West Point by the Hon. John C. Mason. His career as a cadet, however, was abruptly cut short by the breaking out of the Civil War, when, true to his Southern origin, he entered the Confederate service. He was active in recruiting the company mustered in as Company H, of the Fourth Kentucky Volunteers, and became its first lieutenant. He was rapidly promoted, being soon made adjutant of the regiment. Subsequently he was appointed assistant adjutant-general of the brigade commanded by General John C. Breckinridge. In 1863 he served on the staff of General Howes, of Kentucky, in the Trans-Mississippi Department, subsequently on the staff of General Waul, of Texas, and finally with General Magruder, to whose command he was attached until the close of the war. Upon the conclusion of peace the South offered but meagre opportunity for either desirable or profitable employment. Recognizing that the solution of the problem of the South was the development of its resources, he identified himself with Southern railroad interests. His first connection was with the Selma, Rome and Dalton R. R. Subsequently he joined the Virginia and Tennessee Air Line R. R. He came to N. Y. City in 1877, and established himself as a broker and dealer in investments and securities. He is a prominent member of the Southern Society and the New York Club. He owns a stock farm, "Meadowland," in Monmouth County, N. J. Married, in 1869, Mary Webb Pollard, of Montgomery, Ala., daughter of William H. Pollard, and niece of Charles T. Pollard, two of the most prominent citizens of that State. He has four children, William Pollard, Benjamin J., Jr., Mary Elizabeth and Clara Pollard. Address, 66 Broadway, N. Y. City.

ROONEY, John Jerome:

Lawyer, verse writer; born, March 19, 1866, Binghamton, N. Y.; father, John J. Rooney; mother, Ellen Teresa (Shanahan) Rooney. Removed to Philadelphia, Pa., in childhood. Was graduated from Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., 1884; head of class, taking the class honors, and special medals. Degree A. B. and A. M. Immediately after graduation became connected with the Philadelphia Record and for five years did active newspaper work. 1889, removed to New York and entered the Custom House Brokerage and Forwarding business of a leading firm, three years later entering the firm. In 1896, organized the Custom House Brokerage & Forwarding firm of Rooney & Spence, 66 Beaver St., N. Y. City, doing a general shipping business and Customs Revenue practice. Several years later became a member of the New York Bar, practicing chiefly Revenue cases and Estates Law. During the newspaper work and subsequently, Mr. Rooney wrote much verse which was published in all the leading periodicals and newspapers. During the Spanish-American War, he wrote many ballads relating to the incidents of the war, the most noted of which was The Men Behind the Guns, published in the first days of the war and which was the first use of this since celebrated phrase. He also wrote the song for the 250th Anniversary of the discovery of Manhattan Island, which was sung in all the public schools of Greater New York by the children; the song—Right Makes Might. He is a director of the Catholic Club of New York, president of the Pleiades Club; former secretary of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick; president of the Irish Club of New York; a director of the Society of American Authors, and a member of many other organizations. ROOSEVELT, Robert B.:

Author and statesman; born N. Y. City, Aug. 7, 1829; received a collegiate education, and after graduation entered upon the study of law, being admitted to the New York Bar on reaching his majority. His professional life was quickly supplemented by an activity in literature and in political affairs which brought him prominently into attention and turned his life, interests aside from legal practice. His literary taste developed early, and was accompanied by powers of imagination and of reasoning and by a lucid style that have made him popular as a magazine writer and as an author of more ambitious works. Mr. Roosevelt has long been a devotee of sport, but his enthusiasm in this direction has been tempered with a measure of good sense that impelled him to make a vigorous onslaught on the indiscriminate slaughter of game in which so many so-called sportsmen indulge; to overcome this he devoted much time and energy to the organization of clubs for the preservation of game and to the obtaining of legislative restriction on the vandalism that threatened the complete extermination of the food tenants of woods and waters. In 1867, he succeeded in founding the New York Fishery Commission, and was appointed one of the State commissioners; his labors in this direction were active and incessant, and continued until 1888, when his appointment as United States Minister to the Netherlands interfered with his immediate supervision; he wrote at that time an elaborate report, detailing the results of the twenty-one years of labor of the commission. Mr. Roosevelt served as president of the Fish Culture Association for a number of years, and also of the Association for the Protection of Game, and of the International Association for the same purpose. His work in this direction was not confined to labors in organizations, but took the form of literature, in his published volumes; he Game Fish of North America; The Game Birds of the North; Superior Fishing, and Fish Hatching and Fish Catching. Politically he has been an active member of the Democratic party, working in its interests during the Civil War, at which time he took part in the formation of several political associations. His greatest and most useful activity in municipal politics, however, was his share in the founding of the Committee of Seventy, whose work was directed against the outrages of the Tweed Ring; he was also the first vice-president of the Reform Club, and one of the editors of the Citizen, a paper devoted to the policy of this club; subsequently took entire charge of this paper, and worked energetically through its columns for the overthrow of the Tweed ascendancy. In 1870, Mr. Roosevelt was elected a member of the Forty-second Congress, being supported by both wings of the New York Democracy; aside from his political relations, he was actively interested in New York affairs, taking an earnest part in the formation of paid fire and health departments in the city, and acting as a commissioner of the Brooklyn Bridge; was the president of the Holland Trust Company, and took part in the founding of the Lotos Club. Mr. Roosevelt's practice as a lawyer continued for about twenty years after his admission to the Bar, but was afterwards abandoned in consequence of the pressure of political and other interests. He became actively engaged in financial affairs, was president or director in a number of insurance, railroad, and other corporations, and was offered by President Cleveland, during his first term, the position of United States Sub-Treasurer at New York; this he declined in consequence of the labor involved; was frequently offered other public positions, and served, as has been said, as minister to the Netherlands. He edited The Political Works of Charles G. Halpine, and was the author of Five Acres too Much, a clever satire suggested by Edmund Morris's Ten Acres Enough, also of Progressive Petticoats, a humorous illustration of medical habits; Game Fish of North America; Game Birds; Superior Fishing; Fish Hatching and Fish Catching; Florida and the Game Water Birds, Love and Luck, etc.; these are his best known writings, aside from his magazine essays, which have been numerous. Mr. Roosevelt has in course of preparation for the press his political Reminiscences. Mr. Roosevelt was treasurer of the Democratic National Committee at the time of Cleveland's second election; president Sons of the American Revolution; chairman of Committee for Protection of the Soldiers during the war with Spain; delegate to many Democratic conventions; on all the committees to aid the Boers in their war with England; was a former president of Holland Society, and of the Founders and Patriots; member and officer of many clubs, societies, etc. Uncle of President Roosevelt. Address, Sayville, N. Y.

ROOSEVELT, Robert B., Jr.:

Son of Robert B. Roosevelt and Lizzie Ellis Roosevelt; born Flushing, L. I., Aug. 20, 1866; was educated by private tutors and at Military School at Garden City, L. I. He has been engaged in the real estate business for the past fifteen years, devoting his time principally to the care of several estates of which he is trustee. Director in several corporations and a member of the Metropolitan, Players, Strollers, New York Yacht, Larchmont Yacht, Down Town, and other Clubs. Address, The Lilacs, Sayville, L. I.

ROOSEVELT, Theodore:

President of the U. S.; born N. Y. City, Oct. 27, 1858; the son of Theodore Roosevelt, merchant and philanthropist. He was graduated from Harvard University in 1880, and after a visit to Europe, he began the study of law in the office of his uncle, Robert B. Roosevelt; he soon entered politics, and was elected to the Assembly at Albany, in which he served three terms. In the second legislature to which he was chosen, in which the Democrats had a majority, he was candidate for the speakership. In the Republican Convention of 1884, Mr. Roosevelt favored the nomination of Senator Edmunds for the Presidency, but when Blaine obtained the nomination he entered actively into the campaign for the nominee of his party. In the same year he purchased a ranch in the Northwest, and for several years he studied the remote West thoroughly. In 1886, the Republicans nominated Mr. Roosevelt for mayor of New York, being opposed by Henry George, the single tax champion, and Abram S. Hewitt, the regular Democratic nominee. Mr. Roosevelt made a vigorous fight, but Abram S. Hewitt, the Democratic candidate, was successful. Mr. Roosevelt continued to take an active interest in public affairs, and especially in reform of the civil service. He advocated the delivrance of the Federal service, and also that of State and city, from the spoils system. President Harrison appointed him in 1889 United States Civil Service Commissioner, in which position he did his duty earnestly, irrespective of whom he pleased or displeased.

When a Republican, William L. Strong, was elected mayor of New York, the latter requested Mr. Roosevelt to become the head of the Police Board. He accepted the charge, and proceeded vigorously to compel his subordinates to do their duty and enforce the laws. He took the position that laws, while on the statute books, ought to be made effective, and that the executive authority had no right to repudiate a law simply because it was unpopular. April 6, 1897, Mr. Roosevelt gave up his place in the Police Department to become Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Here he worked with energy in putting the navy in condition for the war with Spain which followed the bowing up of the Maine. When war was declared he tendered his resignation as assistant secretary; with President McKinley's intimate friend, Dr. Leonard Wood, an army surgeon, he organized the body of men known as the Rough Riders, gathering recruits for the regiment from among his friends of the ranches and the Western cowboys, Surgeon Wood, on account of his superior tactical knowledge, took command of the regiment, with Mr. Roosevelt second in command. He participated with his regiment in the fighting in front of Santiago, and was promoted to the colonely of the regiment. At the close of the war he returned with his regiment to Montauk Point, where he was mustered out of service. Shortly afterwards he was nominated for and elected to the office of governor of New York. He aspired to a second Term as governor, but was induced to permit the use of his name for the Vice-presidency in the Republican National Convention of 1900, and was elected. He succeeded to the Presidency on the death of President McKinley, Sept. 14, 1901, and was elected to the Presidency in November, 1904, for the term beginning March 4, 1905, by a popular plurality of 2,542,062. He is the author of History of the Naval War of 1812 (1882); Hunting Trips of a Ranchman, (1885); Life of Thomas Hart Benton, (1886); Life of Gouverneur Morris, (1887); Ranch Life and Hunting Trail, (1888); The Winning of the West, (1889-96); History of New York (1890); The Wilderness Hunter, (1893); American Ideals and Other Essays, (1897); The Rough Riders (1899); Life of Oliver Cromwell, (1900); The Strenuous Life, (1900); Works, (8 volumes, 1902), and in collaboration; The Deer Family,

ROOT, Elihu:

Ex-Secretary of War; born Clinton, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1845; in 1864 was graduated from Hamilton College, where his father was professor of mathematics. After graduation from the University Law School in the City of N. Y. in 1867 he was admitted to the Bar and engaged in active practice of his profession in N. Y. City; in a few years he became prominent both as a lawyer and as a leader of the reform element of the Republican party; he has held the office of president of the New England Association, president of the Union League Club and president of the Republican Club of the City of N. Y.; devoting himself closely to his chosen work, he rapidly acquired an extensive practice, particularly in corporation cases, being the counsel in many of the most famous in the annals of N. Y. City; few lawyers of to-day have so remarkable a record of success in cases entrusted to their care; he was leading counsel in the celebrated contest growing out of the will of the late A. T. Stewart, through the schemes of alleged Irish heirs; he was counsel in the Broadway surface railroad litigation, the Sugar Trust contest, the Aqueduct litigation, and, in one of the most sensational cases of modern times, he successfully defended Robert Ray Hamilton in the suit brought about through the machinations of the notorious Emma Mann; while serving as a United States District attorney he convicted Joseph D. Fish, president of the Marine Bank, of criminal complicity in connection with the celebrated Grant-Ward frauds; participated with much distinction as chairman of the Judiciary Committee and leader on the floor of the Republican majority during the Constitutional Convention of New York in 1894; his practice as a lawyer was characterized by constant work in the preparation of cases, and the wonderful power of concentration which enabled him to penetrate quickly to the marrow of the subject under investigation; his arguments seldom failed to carry a comprehensive understanding and clear conviction to those whom he has from time to time been called upon to address; so forceful was his analysis and exposure of municipal corruption in the famous address delivered at Cooper Union during the Presidential campaign in 1892 that, at the time, the boldness of his assault astonished his hearers, but in the light of the Lexow exposures, following the Parkhurst agitation, his arraignment of evil-doers was completely justified; subsequent to the close of the Spanish-American War, the condition of affairs demanded that the office of Secretary of War should be filled by a lawyer of great administrative ability and one in the full possession of his mental and physical powers; the duties of the office were most intricate and complicated and called for physical self-sacrifice that few men are able to give to the work; no Secretary of War since the day of Edwin M. Stanton has had anything like the difficulties to adjust, the opposition to overcome and the new systems to inaugurate; called suddenly from his legal profession in the City of N. Y., Mr. Root found himself confronted with the task of placing an army of 70,000 men in the Philippine Islands to put down an insurrection attended with almost universal sympathy, if not the active support of the inhabitants of those islands; communication was difficult and treachery, suspicion and assassination confronted the troops at every step; while called upon to conduct affairs with great firmness, the Secretary of War constantly held in view the necessity for carrying conviction to the minds of the inhabitants of all those islands that the American Army was not there for the purpose of exploitation, and that having received the territory from the Spanish government, the great duty devolved upon the United States of providing a proper government which would convey to the Philippine people some idea of the benefits to be derived from living under our flag; in the midst of this great work the secretary was, early in his official career, compelled to take up the great burden of sending the Chinese Expedition to rescue our minister and his household; this expedition was conducted under instructions prepared by the Secretary of War; many of the most important questions arising during that trying period were left to his decision; that American interests were well protected and that our country emerged from the very complicated situation with every cause for self-satisfaction is a matter of history; to the untiring and painstaking efforts of Mr. Root is greatly due the establishment of civil government in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and the success of a stable government far beyond just expectation in the island of Cuba; the solution by Mr. Root of thousands of intricate legal questions, involving to a great extent our National honor, in the adjustment of civil and military affairs in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands stands without parallel; in the midst of this vast work he was called upon to reorganize the army, to change our staff system and to build up a system of education and training for the army which will long stand as a monument to his masterly ability; resigned from the Cabinet of President Roosevelt in 1904, and resumed the practice of his profession; LL.D., Hamilton, 1894; Yale, 1900; was member of Alaska Boundary Tribunal which sat in London in Sept. and Oct., 1903, and settled the dispute boundary between Alaska and Canada. Residence, 25 East 69th St.; office, 32 Liberty St., N. Y. City.

D., Dickinson, 1893. Mr. Russell was married to Ruth Ferriss in Brooklyn in 1886. He was a lecturer before the woman's law class in the New York University, 1892-1902; member Long Island Historical and American Social Science Societies. Author: Lectures on Law for Women, (1892); Outline Study of Law, (1900); is a contributor to law journals and reviews. Address, 482 Greene Ave., Brooklyn; office, 120 Broadway, N. Y. City.

RUSSELL, Dr. James Earl:

Dean of Teachers College; born of Scotch descent, Hamden, N. Y., 1864; trained in the public schools and at Delaware Academy, Delhi, N. Y.; was graduated from Cornell University in 1887, winning at that time election to the Phi Beta Kappa Society, final honors in philosophy, and the post of class orator at commencement. While in college established and conducted a university department in the Ithaca Daily Journal, and founded and became the first president of the University Classical Association. After teaching in the Hill School of Pottstown, Pa., and acting as principal of the Cascadilla School of Ithaca, he went, in 1893, for two years of travel and study in Europe. While on the continent he acted as European commissioner of the Regents of the University of the State of New York and agent for the Government Bureau of Education in Washington; he studied also at the Universities of Jena, Berlin and Leipzig, receiving from the latter, in 1895, the degree of doctor of philosophy. While yet in Europe, Dr. Russell was appointed professor of philosophy and education in the University of Colorado; here he spent the years from 1895 to 1897 bringing the university into close relations with the secondary schools of the State. In 1897 he was called to Teachers College, to occupy the chair of history of education; soon after, in the development of a plan for the union of Teachers College with Columbia University, he was made dean of the College. He is also Barnard Professor of Education in Columbia University. Under his direction the union of the college with the university has been consummated, and the development of the college itself has been remarkable. In 1898 seventy-two students were enrolled, no one of whom was doing graduate work; and in 1902 seven hundred and eight students were enrolled, of whom nearly two hundred were graduates of other colleges. Dean Russell is interested also in the wider aspects of education, having recently visited Porto Rico as special government commissioner, and being active in the movement for better education in the South. Author: German Higher Schools; The History, Organization and Method of Secondary Education in Germany, (1898); and The Extension of University Teaching in England and America, (1895), translated into German in the same year; editor of the American Teachers Series of volumes on education and of the Teachers College Record; and is a frequent contributor to such educational journals as the Educational Review, New York, and the School Review, Chicago. Address, 500 West 121st St., N. Y. City.

S. and England; married, first, David Braham, composer; second, Edward Solomon, composer; third, Sig. Perugini, operatic tenor. Address, 161 West 57th St., N. Y. City.

RUSSELL, William Hepburn:

Lawyer; born Hannibal, Mo., May 17, 1857; son of Daniel L. and Matilda (Richmond) Russell; educated at the public and high schools and commercial colleges of his native town. He served as reporter, city and managing editor and editor-in-chief of the Courier, Clipper, Herald and the Journal in Hannibal. Studied law and was admitted to the Missouri Bar in 1882, and immediately after admission to the Bar was elected city attorney of his native town by a large popular majority; re-elected in 1884; retired as city attorney of Hannibal in order to accept employment as a general attorney of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago R. R., and removed from Missouri to Indiana, residing first at Lafayette and afterwards at Frankfort, Ind., during the years 1885, 1886 and 1887; retired from the attorneyship of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago R. R. and removed to Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1887, remaining in Tennessee in the practice of his profession until 1895. During his residence in Tennessee engaged actively in each political campaign and in 1892 was a Democratic Presidential elector. In May, 1895, removed to N. Y. City, and since that date has been actively engaged in the practice of the law as a member of the firm of Russell & Winslow; practices largely in the Federal Courts, where he has had much experience. On his removal to New York, at once affiliated with Tammany Hall, and in 1895 and 1896 spoke throughout the city and State in support of the Democratic ticket in the local and State campaigns; in 1897 left the Tammany organization because of his opposition to the leadership of Richard Croker and "Crokerism" and "Deveryism" in municipal politics; supported Seth Low for mayor in 1901, and during the campaign of that year was the chairman of the Greater New York Democracy, a Democratic organization formed for the purpose of assisting to overthrow the leadership of Croker in Tammany Hall. He was appointed by Mayor Low senior commissioner of accounts of the City of N. Y. in charge of the Department of Accounts and served as such until Sept., 1903, at which time he tendered his resignation to Mayor Low and declared his purpose to support the Democratic party in the municipal campaign of 1903; actively engaged as a speaker and otherwise in support of the candidacy of George B. McClellan as against Mayor Low, placing his opposition to Mayor Low's re-election upon the ground that Croker having ceased to be the leader of the Democratic party in the City of N. Y. and "Deveryism" having been eliminated from the Democratic party and from municipal politics, he, as a Democrat, in a year preceding a Presidential election, was under obligations, as a party man, to support the Democratic candidates. Mr. Russell is the author, in connection with his partner, Wm. Beverly Winslow, of an extensive legal work, Russell & Winslow's Syllabus-Digest of the United States Supreme Court Reports, four volumes, the last of which has just been published. Member Manhattan, New York and Hardware Clubs, and of the Order of Elks. Residence, 145 West 97th St.; office, 253 Broadway, N. Y. City.

SHELLKOPF, Arthur:

Financier; born in Buffalo, June 13, 1856, son of Jacob F. Schoelkopf, who came to America from Germany, more than half a century ago, and settled in Buffalo; he was prominent in business circles in Western New York for many years. After some education in private schools at home, the subject of this sketch was sent to Germany at the age of nine years, where for four years he attended the Academy at Kirchheim, U. T., his father's native home, in the province of Wurtemberg. Returning to Buffalo in 1869, he received further education in St. Joseph's College, and then took a course at Bryant and Stratton's Business College as a final preparation for active business life, leaving school in 1873. The following four years he devoted to acquiring a practical knowledge of the milling trade; in 1877 was sent to Niagara Falls to take charge of the Hydraulic Canal at Niagara Falls, and to assist in the erection of the Niagara Flouring Mills. These mills stand at the head of the large mills in western New York, having a capacity of 2,000 barrels daily. Since the year 1878 he has acted as secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power and Manufacturing Company, which was organized in that year to develop the Hydraulic Canal and to furnish water power for other mills in the vicinity. On Oct. 13, 1900, he was married to Miss Jessie Gluck, of Niagara Falls. SCHMITT, William P.:

Commissioner of Parks in Borough of Bronx; born N. Y. City, Jan. 25, 1862; was graduated from Grammar School No. 59, and subsequently pursued a course of study with the view of entering the Naval Academy at Annapolis. At the age of seventeen he entered the employ of the Central Park Brewery, at the solicitation of his father, who was then largely interested in that concern. Having served an apprenticeship of three years, during which time he thoroughly mastered the business in all its details, he entered the U. S. Brewers' Academy (the first institution of its kind in this country, and in 1881 became its first graduate. It being an old German custom for parents to send out their sons, after serving their apprenticeship, to make their own way in the world, Mr. Schmitt's father adopted this course, and the son was, accordingly, sent out to earn his own livelihood. After five years of varied experience, during which time he traversed the U. S. from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico—having been in almost every State and territory—he returned home, at the request of his father, to become brew-master in the establishment of Schmitt & Schwanen-fluegel, his father being senior partner. In 1892, Mr. Schmitt became largely interested in a brewery in the West Indies where he filled the position of general manager for a number of years. On his return to New York his state of health precluded the resumption of his former position of brew-master, and he therefore became interested in other ventures—notably the management of his tobacco plantation of 600 acres, in Florida,—and later became proprietor and editor of the Eufaula Sun, a daily and weekly publication, at Eufaula, Ala.; was also active in local politics. The death of his father, on May 4, 1897, closely followed by the death of his brother, necessitated his return to New York to take care of the former's interests in the business. He became vice-president and brew-master of the concern, in which capacity he is still actively engaged; also affiliated with the Brewers' Board of Trade, the American Brewing Institute, the U. S. Brewers' Association, the Union Brewers' Association (of which he is treasurer and a director), the Brew-masters' Association, and the Original Brewers' and Coopers' Benevolent Association, succeeding his father as treasurer of this association, serving seven years; is now an honorary member and trustee. Was appointed, 1903, by Mayor-Elect McClellan, executive of the Department of Parks of the Borough of the Bronx. He was connected for years with the German Liederkrantz, and is a member of the Arion Society, the Democratic Club, the Wyandotte Club, of which he is vice-president), the Irish Athletic Club, the Central Turn Verein, the New York Athletic Club, an honorary member New York Golf Club, New York Zoological Society and New

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister:

Lieutenant-general, U. S. Army; author; born in Chautauqua County, N. Y.. Sept. 29, 1831; son of James and Caroline McAllister Schofield; married, first, Harriet Bartlett, daughter of Professor W. H. C. Bartlett, of West Point, N. Y.; second, Georgia Kilbourne, daughter of Mrs. Augusta W. Kilbourne, of Keokuk, Ia. He chose the legal profession, but was appointed to the Military Academy in 1849; graduated, 1853; served with his regiment, the First Artillery, in Florida two years, and as assistant professor at West Point four years; became professor of physics in Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., 1860-61. Was in active service with the army during the four years of the Civil War, much of the time commanding a department and an army in the field; in many successful engagements, especially in the battle of Franklin, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1864, in which he gained a decisive victory over a superior Confederate army. Was made brigadier-general and brevet major-general in the regular army for his services in the battle of Franklin; was selected by General Grant, in 1865, to conduct such operations as might prove to be necessary to terminate the French occupation of Mexico. At the request of Secretary Seward he went to France in Nov., 1865, to accomplish, if possible, the withdrawal of the French army from Mexico by peaceful means; the fortunate termination of this mission and official negotiations rendered unnecessary any military operations in Mexico. After returning from Europe, commanded the First Military District, (the State of Virginia constituting the "First Military District"), under the Congressional reconstruction laws. Was Secretary of War under Presidents Johnson and Grant from June, 1868, to March, 1869. Was made major-general in the regular army by President Grant the day of his inauguration as President; commanded in succession the several military departments and divisions of the country, including the Military Academy, and was assigned to the command of the U. S. Army in 1888; was made lieutenant-general of the army by special act of Congress, Feb. 5, 1895. When entering upon the duties of commanding-general of the army, General Schofield assumed in effect the position of chief of staff of the army instead of commanding-general, explaining to President Cleveland, in a carefully prepared paper, that under the Constitution of the United States, the President being commander-in-chief, there could be no other, and that the true position of the military head of the army was that of chief of staff to the commander-in-chief, in accordance with the almost universal custom of the great military powers of the world. This was the foundation of the measure which has finally been adopted by Congress and put into operation organizing a general staff of the army with a chief of staff at its head. After his retirement from active service in 1895, General Schofield wrote a sketch of his official career, under the title of Forty-six Years in the Army. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by the University of Chicago in 1884. Was commander-in-chief of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, from 1900 to 1904. SCHUMANN, Walter:

U. S. Consul; born N. Y. City, July 1, 1870; educated at Columbia Grammar School, New York, at which institution he took the commercial course; was graduated head of his class in the spring of 1888, and also took first honors in book-keeping; won, in 1886, the gold medal for all around gymnastics; during his last year at school was co-editor of the monthly school paper, the Columbia News. On leaving school he entered the employ of an importing house of New York having a large trade in China, Japan and Italy. There he received a thorough business training and remained until 1891, when he accepted an offer from a structural iron and steel works. In the panic year of 1893, however, this company failed, whereupon the former superintendent of the company and he joined forces, bought the machinery and stock on hand, as well as all unfinished contracts, and continued the business; on Feb. 1, 1897, sold out his interest in the firm to his partner. On June 23, 1897, he was appointed U. S. Consul to Mainz, Germany, which post he has since filled. Several years ago he compiled and published The Law of Marriage and Divorce of the German Empire, as contained in the German Civil Code of Jan. 1, 1900, and has recently completed and published an Outline History of the City of Mainz, Germany; he is at present engaged in the compilation of a history of American literature, in the German language. Address, U. S. Consulate, Mainz, Germany.

SCHURMAN, George W.:

Lawyer; born July 6, 1867, Freetown, Prince Edward Island; son Robert and Lydia Schurman; graduate of Dalhousie College, 1890, and Cornell University Law School, 1893. Married Miss Munro, daughter of George Munro, publisher; member firm, Carter, Hughes & Dwight; assistant District Attorney, 1900; member of Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity, University, Cornell University and Englewood (N. J.) Golf Clubs, Holland Society and City Bar Association. Residence, 316 West End Ave.; office, 96 Broadway, N. Y. City.

SCHURMAN, Jacob Gould:

President of Cornell University; born Freetown, Prince Edward Island, May 22, 1854, being descended from an old Dutch family which came to New Amsterdam about the middle of the 17th Century. He lived on his father's farm until he was twelve years of age, attending school uninterruptedly, and in 1867 he took up a position as clerk in a general store at Summerside, P. E. I., where he remained for over two years. Attended the Summerside Grammar School for a year, and in the autumn of 1870 won the first of the six scholarships established by the government at the Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown. Late in 1873 he entered the sophomore class of Acadia College, Nova Scotia, and after a year and a half of very successful study, in the course of which he led his class in all subjects and secured several money prizes, he won, in 1875, the Canadian Gilchrist scholarship ($500 a year for three years) in connection with the University of London. In 1877 he was graduated from the University of London with University scholarship in philosophy ($250 a year for three years), and the following year he was a student in Paris and at the University of Edinburgh, taking the degree of D.Sc. from the latter institution in 1878. In June, 1878, he won the Hibbert traveling fellowship ($1,000 a year for two years), which was open to all graduates of British Universities, and was competed for by over sixty men from Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, etc., and the following two years were spent in study as Hibbert Fellow at Heidelberg, Berlin and Göttingen, as well as in Italy. He holds the degrees of A. B. (1877) and A. M. (1878) from the University of London; that of D. Sc. (1878) from the University of Edinburgh; and the honorary degree of LL.D. from Columbia University (1892), Yale University (1901), and the University of Edinburgh (1902). His professional career began in 1880, when he was made professor of English literature, political economy, and psychology in Acadia College; in 1882 he was called thence to the professorship of metaphysics and English literature in Dalhousie College, and in 1886 he was appointed to the Sage professorship of philosophy in Cornell University, which he held until he was called to the presidency of the university in 1892, in the meantime having also been dean of the Sage School of Philosophy since its organization in 1891. He was for several years editor of the Philosophical Review, and he has had numerous articles in various scientific and literary periodicals, both American and foreign; aside from these, his published works consist of Kantian Ethics and the Ethics of Evolution, (1881); The Ethical Import of Darwinism, (1888); Belief in God, (1890); Agnosticism and Religion, (1896) A Generation of Cornell, (1898); joint author Report of the Philippine Commission (to Congress), (1900); and Philippine Affairs; A Retrospect and Outlook, (1902). In 1899 Mr. Schurman was appointed by President McKinley chairman of the U. S. Philippine commission, and remained in the islands for nearly nine months. Since his return he has taken a prominent part in the discussions of the Philippine problem, and has been one of the leaders in the movement to secure eventual independence for the islands; is also a frequent and favorite lecturer before various organizations, societies and colleges on educational, religious, philosophical, social and political themes. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; an associate of the American Institute of Social Service; vice-president of the Continental Union League; a member of the National Educational Association, the national advisory committee of the National Good Roads Association, the council of seventy of the National Irrigation Congress, the Century, University, Union League and the Ends of the Earth Clubs, the Vorstand of the Vereinigung Alter Deutscher Studenten in America, and an official visitor, under the Willard State Hospital. President Schurman married, 1884, Barbara Forrest, oldest daughter of the late Mr. George Munro, publisher of New York. Address, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.

SCHURZ, Carl:

Soldier and author; born Liblar, Prussia, Mar. 2, 1829; after studying at the gymnasium of Cologne, he entered the University of Bonn in 1846. At the beginning of the revolution in 1848 he joined Gottfried Kinkel, professor of rhetoric in the university, in a publication of a Liberal newspaper, of which at one time he was the sole conductor. In spring of 1849, because of attempt to promote an insurrection at Bonn, was compelled to flee with Kinkel to the Palatinate, entering the revolutionary army as adjutant, and taking part in the defence of Rastadt; on the surrender of that fortress he escaped to Switzerland; in 1850 he returned secretly to Germany and effected the escape of Kinkel from the fortress of Spandau. In the spring of 1851 he was in Paris as correspondent for German journals, and he afterwards spent a year in teaching at London; he came to the United States in 1852, resided three years in Philadelphia, and then settled in Watertown, Wis. In the Presidential canvass of 1856 he delivered speeches in German in behalf of the Republican party and in the following year he was an unsuccessful candidate for lieutenant-governor of Wisconsin. During the contest between Stephen A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln for the office of U. S. Senator from Illinois, in 1858, Schurz delivered his first speech in the English language, which was widely published. Soon afterwards he moved to Milwaukee, and began the practice of law. In 1859-60 he made a lecture tour in New England, and aroused attention by a speech in Springfield, Mass., against the ideas and policy of Mr. Douglas. Mr. Schurz was a member of the National Republican convention of 1860, and spoke both in English and German during the canvass. President Lincoln appointed him minister to Spain, but he resigned in Dec., 1861, in order to enter the army. In April, 1862, he was commissioned brigadier-general of Volunteers, and June 17, took command of a division in Sigel's corps with which he participated in the second battle of Bull Run; was made major-general Mar. 14, 1863, and at the battle of Chancellorsville commanded a division of General Howard's corps; had temporary command of this corps at Gettysburg, and subsequently took part in the battle of Chattanooga. During the summer of 1865 he visited the Southern States as special commissioner appointed by President Johnson, for the purpose of examining their condition; in the winter of 1865-66 was the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, and in the summer of 1866 he removed to Detroit, where he founded the Post. In 1867 he became editor of the Westliche Post, a German newspaper published in St. Louis; was then temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention in Chicago in 1868, where he moved an amendment to the platform, which was adopted, recommending a general amnesty; in Jan. 1869, was chosen U. S. Senator from Missouri. He opposed some of the chief measures of Grant's administration, and in 1872 organized the Liberal party, presiding over the convention in Cincinnati that nominated Horace Greeley for the Presidency. After the election of 1872 he took an active part in the debates in the Senate in favor of the restoration of specie payments, and against the continuation of military interference in the South; he advocated the election of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency, and that gentleman appointed him Secretary of the Interior; he introduced competitive examinations for appointments in the Interior Department, and effected various reforms. At the close of the Hayes administration he became editor of the N. Y. Evening Post, and held that position until 1884. General Schurz has since then been a popular lecturer, has been connected with the press, and was one of the leaders of the "independent" movement advocating the election of Grover Cleveland in 1884; contributor to Harper's Weekly, 1892-98; president of the National Civil Service Reform League, 1892-1901. Residence, 24 E. 91st St.; office, 15 William St., N. Y. City.

SEE, Horace:

Engineer and naval architect; born Philadelphia, 1835; son of Margaretta Hilliard and Richard Calhoun See. After receiving a classical and mathematical education in private schools he engaged with Messrs. I. P. Morris & Co., of Philadelphia, passing through their shops and office. In the year of 1879, after passing through subordinate positions with Messrs. Neafe & Levy, of Philadelphia, the National Iron Armor and Shipbuilding Co. of Camden, N. J., with George W. Snyder, of Pottsville, Pa., and Messrs. Wm. Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia, he became superintending engineer of the latter concern, and was very successful in the methods introduced by him to raise the standard of work in this establishment, whereby the ships not only made records for speed, but at the same time were found to demand only a minimum amount to maintain. These characteristics are exemplified in the performance and reliability of the S. S. Alameda and Mariposa, on the Pacific; the steamer Monmouth is another example, this vessel having since her arrival in New York Harbor in 1888 maintained her position as a pacemaker, notwithstanding she is now in her eighteenth year and many improvements have since then been introduced in vessels of her character to bring about better results. In 1886 he induced his firm to modify the Government designs for machinery of the gunboat Yorktown and cruiser Newark by substituting the triple expansion for the double compound engine. This led to considerable opposition, but he made it so clear to Mr. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, who was favorable towards introducing that which would improve the character of the vessels, and succeeded so well in convincing him that it would be a mistake to neglect the opportunity of doing so, that his plans were adopted. The wisdom of this decision has been evidenced in the superior performance of these vessels and that of the Philadelphia, although the engines were of the horizontal type with its supposed limitations. The dynamite cruiser Vesuvius delivered to the U. S. Government in 1889 is an additional example. The engines of this vessel were of the four crank vertical triple expansion variety, the first of this kind in the Navy of the U. S., if not that of any country. The performance was highly satisfactory, a speed of nearly twenty-two knots being attained in a vessel of over eight hundred tons displacement at this early date. It attracted considerable attention both here and abroad. The vessels and machinery designed by him contain many improvements of his invention not only in the design but also in the methods of construction which have enabled the vessels to be successful from the very beginning of their life. The cylindrical mandrel by securing a perfectly true bearing and journal exploded the erroneous idea that it was necessary for an engine to begin with hot bearings and that time was necessary to remove such a condition. The value of this invention has been notably exemplified not only in the performance of the S. S. Alameda and Steamer Monmouth, above noted, but also in all the vessels where it has been employed. The radial valve gear invented by F. C. Marshall and afterwards abandoned by the inventor on account of excessive wear has been improved and employed by Mr. See with much success and with less wear and tear than can be obtained by the Stephenson link motion. The water-tube boiler has received improvements at his hands by which its safety, as well as economy and durability, have been increased. Other improvements of his include the grease extractor, evaporator, piston, and last but not least, the ash ejector by the use of which the ashes are forced by a jet of water through a pipe from the fire room floor upward and outside the vessel above the water line, thereby reducing the labor, avoiding noise and securing cleanliness. This invention has been further improved by the introduction of an air vessel near the

jet. The success attending this new feature led him to extend the application of an air vessel to a fire hydrant, where the air surrounds the pipe leading to the nozzle to form protection against freezing, act as a cushion to prevent water-hammer and to secure a steadier flow of water. Many improvements have also been introduced by him in the construction of the hull of a vessel, that of the patented folding hatch cover being one that has not only expedited the handling of large covers, but made the operation safer and the hatch tighter. He was also the first in this country to employ the lap-butts in the outside plating, the bilge-keel, the water-tight air port in the pilot-house, etc. He came to New York in 1889, where his field of operations was enlarged, acting as consulting engineer of the Newport News S. & D. D. Co., superintending engineer of the Southern Pacific Co., superintendent of the Cromwell S. S. Co., and superintending engineer of the Pacific Mail S. S. Co., as well as consulting engineer for different parties. There have been built or altered from his design and under his superintendence since his location in New York very nearly thirty vessels in the construction of which he has introduced many improvements both in the hull and machinery, improvements the use of which is not confined to this country but has also extended to others. His designs have not been of the sensational order or made to cater to a fashion, but simple and direct in order to obtain the best results. He has just completed designs for a steel barge and tug for the N. Y. State Canal Commission to ascertain whether two boats loaded to ten feet draft could be built to carry 1000 tons of wheat each and of such dimensions that two could be readily passed through the locks at one time. He has also been called upon by the Panama R. R. Co. to design vessels for this company. He is a member of the British Institute of Naval Architects, American Society Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, North-East Coast Institute Engineers and Shipbuilders, England; associate member American Society of Naval Engineers, U. S. Naval Institute; past president American Society of Mechanical Engineers; Fellow American Association for the Advancement of Science; member American Geographical Society, Chamber of Commerce of New York, New York Yacht Club, Century Association, Colonial Society of Pennsylvania, Sons of the Revolution, Pennsylvania Society of N. Y. SETON, Ernest Thompson:

Naturalist, artist, author and lecturer; born South Shields, Durham, England, Aug. 14, 1860; son of Joseph Logan and Alice (Snowdon) Seton Thompson; great-great-grandson of George Seton, last Earl of Winton. The family is an ancient one of Scotch origin; the name Thompson was assumed temporarily by the family, and used by the writer as a non de plume. He was taken by his parents to Canada in early childhood, and after pursuing a classical course at Toronto Collegiate Institute, he, at the age of eighteen, went to London to study art; there he was awarded a scholarship entitling him to seven years' free tuition at the Royal Academy, but becoming dissatisfied with the methods of instruction, he left the academy in 1882, and joined a brother who had a farm on the upper Assiniboine River, in Manitoba. Three years—the decisive period of his life—were spent in that region, and much of the time was devoted to zoölogical expeditions, covering hundreds of miles. A series of papers contributed to the various scientific journals in 1883-84-85, brought his name into public notice and the volumes that grew out of them, The Birds of Manitoba, and the Mammals of Manitoba led to his appointment as government naturalist to the province. The illustrations for these and other papers added to his reputation, and in 1885 the Century Co., of N. Y. City, invited Mr. Seton, or Seton-Thompson, for so he signed himself for several years, to remove to that city and aid in illustrating The Encyclopaedic Dictionary; more than 1,000 drawings of animals and birds were made by him for this work. At the conclusion of his engagement, in 1890, he sailed for Europe, and became a pupil of Henry Mosler, in Paris. Within a year he had painted his first picture, the subject being a sleeping wolf, and this being sent to the Salon was hung on the line; to subsequent salons he contributed paintings and drawings of wolves, to the number of eighteen, and out of his predilection for this animal grew the nickname of Wolf. He returned to America in 1892 and at the Columbia Exposition, 1893, exhibited a large canvas, entitled Awaited in Vain, which represented a wolf triumph over man. During 1893 he visited New Mexico, and there distinguished himself by killing a famous wolf which for years had thwarted the efforts of other hunters to take his head. A story based on this experience, and entitled Lobo, appeared in Scribner's Magazine in 1894, and was pronounced by leading journals to be one of the best wolf stories ever written. In 1894 he returned to Paris; studied under Gérome, Bourgeois and Ferrier, and also completed a work on the anatomy of animals from the artist's point of view; this represented four years' serious labor, and was published in 1896, with the title of Art Anatomy of Animals, and was highly praised by such artists as Lord Leighton and Gérôme. Since 1896 he has resided in N. Y. City, engaged in literary work, but from time to time he has appeared on the lecture platform in all parts of the U. S., with unusual success. His books have had great influence in popularizing the study of natural history, while exciting universal admiration for their purely literary and artistic quality and their fresh and sympathetic treatment of animal life. Wild Animals I Have Known (1898), the most popular of these, was followed by The Trail of the Sandhill Stag, (1899); Biography of a Grizzly, (1900); Wild Animal Play for Children, (1900); Pictures of Wild Animals, (1901); Lives of the Hunted, (1901); Two Little Savages, (1903); Monarch, the Big Bear, (1904); Woodmyth and Fable, (1905). Married in N. Y. City, June 1, 1896, Grace, daughter of Albert Gallatin, of San Francisco, herself an artist and author. Residence, Wyndygoul, Cos Cob, Conn.; and 80 West 40th St., N. Y. City.

SETON, Grace Gallatin:

Author, book designer; born at Sacramento, Cal.; daughter of Albert Gallatin and Nemie Rhodes. Left California at age of seven, and was educated in Detroit, Chicago (Chicago Female College) and Brooklyn (Packer Collegiate Institute); moved to N. Y. City in 1888, where she has since resided, with the exception of intervals spent abroad. During one of these, 1894-96, she began writing for periodicals in London, Paris and N. Y. City, appearing in Quartier Latin, Paris; Ladies' Pictorial, Home Notes, and others, London. In America she was a regular contributor to the San Francisco Call and the Chronicle, often using the pen name of Dorothy Dodge; also writing for Demorest's Magazine, The Delineator, Our Animal Friends, and the New Magazine. In 1901-02 she contributed a series entitled A. B. C. Zoo Sketches, to the Truth Magazine; also has written several children's stories, syndicated; in 1900 the book A Woman Tenderfoot was published, which previously appeared serially in The Puritan, it being the result of several long trips in the Rocky Mountains in company with Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton, whom she married on June 1, 1896. Earliest publication appeared in The Mountain Echo in 1889; in 1902 a song entitled If You were I and I Were You, Sweetheart, was published by G. Schirmer, Jr., Boston, Mass. (music by Randegger). Mrs. Seton's earliest work in designing was in costumes for the stage, 1892, and the first cover design published was for The Art Anatomy of Animals, 1896. A list of books for which she has done the designs for cover, title page, make-up and general supervision, in which she has followed original methods and been successful in a field hitherto undeveloped, are as follows: Art Anatomy of Animals; Wild Animals I Have Known; The Trail of the Sandhill Stag; Biography of a Grizzly; The Wild Animal Play; A Woman Tenderfoot; Lives of the Hunted; Pictures of Wild Animals; Two Little Savages; Woodmyth and Fable. She is president of the Pen and Brush, a club composed of women writers, painters and sculptors, 1899-1901, 1903-05; New York delegate of the League of American Pen Women, 1902-04; member of the Women's Press Club of N. Y. City, the Wednesday Afternoon Club, the National Arts Club; also member of the advisory board of the School of Applied Design for Women; of the governing board Connecticut council of the Sequoia League; the Edwina Free Kindergarten; director of the Woman's Traveling Exchange. Residences, Wyndygoul, Cos Cob, Conn., and 80 West 40th St., N. Y. City.

SEWARD, William H.:

Soldier and banker; born June 18, 1839, Auburn, N. Y., in the homestead erected in 1816 by his maternal grandfather, Judge Elijah Miller, now known as the "Seward Mansion." He was the third and youngest son of William H. Seward, Secretary of State, and of Frances A. Seward. In 1857, desiring to support himself and gain a business knowledge, he secured a clerkship in a large hardware store in Albany, where he remained two years. In 1859, he relinquished his clerkship to become the private secretary of his father, then a United States Senator in Washington. Here he made the personal acquaintance of many of the most distinguished public men of that day. In June, 1860, married Miss Janet M. Watson, and to them have been born three children, Cornelia, wife of Frederick I. Allen, attorney and counsellor-at-law, and now U. S. commissioner of patents; William H. Seward, Jr., attorney of the firm of Underwood, Storke & Seward, and Miss Frances Janet. During this year, in connection with his early friend, Clinton D. MacDougall, he projected and organized, in Auburn, N. Y., the banking house of William H. Seward & Co. Early in 1862 he was appointed by Governor Morgan one of the war committee of his Congressional district, of which committee he was made secretary; during this summer he was engaged in enlisting and forwarding troops. In August, leaving his business interests in trustworthy hands, he accepted the appointment of lieutenant-colonel of the regiment then organizing, the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth N. Y. Volunteers, soon afterward changed to Ninth N. Y. Heavy Artillery; in Sept., 1862, his regiment was first assigned to duty in Haskins' division, Twenty-second Army Corps, defences of Washington, where, under the direction of the engineers department, Lieutenant-Colonel Seward took an active part in the construction of several of the large forts north of the Potomac; among them, and the most important, was Fort Foote, at Rosier's Bluff, where he mounted and used the largest land ordnance then known to the service. This fort is one of the few of those historic landmarks of the Rebellion still standing. In the spring of 1863, Lieutenant-Colonel Seward was sent by President Lincoln, under the direction of the War Department, on a delicate secret mission to New Orleans and to General Banks, then operating on the Bayou Teche in Louisiana; this service was satisfactorily accomplished, but not without much danger and hardship. In May, 1864, the Ninth Artillery, under Colonel Seward's command, he having been promoted to colonel, joined the Army of the Potomac at Hanover Court House, and became a part of the Second Brigade, Rickett's Third Division, Wright's Sixth Army Corps, under General Grant. From this time forward he participated in many of the engagements around Petersburg and Richmond, among which was the battle of Cold Harbor, where he led in person a successful assault on the rebel earthworks in front of his command with a loss to his regiment of 142 killed and wounded; for gallant service in this engagement General Rickett's division received special commendation from General Meade. On July 6, with one battalion, four companies of his regiment, Colonel Seward was hurriedly sent, with part of Rickett's division, to Frederick, Md., to oppose General Early, who was advancing upon Baltimore and Washington. At the battle of Monocacy, which took place July 9, and proved to be one of the most obstinately contested battles of the war, lasting most of the day, he was wounded in the arm and sustained a broken leg by the fall of his horse, shot under him on the final charge. General Lew Wallace, in command of the Union forces, in a dispatch to Washington, reported Colonel Seward "as having acted with rare gallantry." Soon after his services were emphasized by an autograph letter from Secretary of War Stanton, inclosing his appointment as brigadier-general of Volunteers for "gallant and meritorious services." As soon as his wounds permitted he was sent to Martinsburg in command of the First Brigade, Third Division, Department of West Virginia, then operating in the Shenandoah Valley, and for a short time, after the capture of General Crook, he was in command of the same division at Harper's Ferry. His military service ended with his resignation at the close of the war, when he resumed the place at the head of his banking house, which, through his energy and foresight, is now, after a prosperous existence of more than forty years, recognized as one of the strongest institutions of the kind in Western New York. Several years ago General Seward established in Auburn, and has since conducted at his own expense, Free Reading Rooms for Workingmen, which have rapidly grown in popularity, until the average attendance each season reached forty thousand. In politics General Seward has always been an active, enthusiastic and generous adherent of the Republican party. While frequently mentioned by his friends for political honors, he has usually declined, preferring a business life to the perplexities and obligations of a political career; in 1884 was a prominent candidate for governor at the Saratoga Convention, and was earnestly pressed for that position by his party associates and friends. He has twice been nominated an elector-at-large on the Republican State Presidential ticket, and was made president of the Electoral College at its session in Albany in 1889 by the unanimous choice of his associates. Is president of Auburn City Hospital; trustee of Wells College, Cayuga County Savings Bank; director in American Express Co. Member of the American Geographical Society, Loyal Legion, Union League Club of New York, United Service Club, G. A. R., Grant Monument Association, American Historical Society and others. SHELDON, James C.:

Republican Assemblyman, representing the Second Assembly district of Cattaraugus County; born Randolph, N. Y., Nov. 10, 1871. His father, Charles C. Sheldon, was one of the representative men of that section of the State, and for over a quarter of a century was actively engaged in business enterprises in Randolph; he was an enthusiastic Republican and was identified with that party throughout Cattaraugus County. James C. Sheldon was educated in the Randolph Union School and at Chamberlain Institution, graduating from the latter institution in 1889. For four years he was associated with his father and afterward engaged alone in the mercantile and retail coal business. In 1893 he commenced the study of law in the offices of ex-Supreme Court Judge William H. Henderson and Alex. Wentworth, Esp., at Randolph, and three years later was admitted to the Bar at Rochester. His political career may be said to have commenced when he attained his majority. In that year he was elected justice of the peace and was continued in office until he resigned seven years afterward, and at the time of his first election he had the distinction of being the youngest magistrate in the U. S. He has been chairman of the Republican campaign committee of Randolph for nine years and a member of his Assembly district committee since the death of his father, whom he succeeded in office; was assistant secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1894, and in 1899 was made assistant chief of the revision department of the Assembly; in 1900-01-03 he was chief of the latter department, being selected each year without opposition. In connection with other work he has for several years contributed to the press throughout the State, and as a writer of political editorials and on subjects of public interest he has come into prominence; at home he is active for the best interests of his town. Was elected to the Assembly in 1902, and in 1903 he was appointed a member of the following Assembly committees: Insurance, Labor and Industries, and Indian Affairs. In the campaign of 1903, Mr. Sheldon was re-nominated by this party for the Assembly and was opposed by a candidate nominated by both the Democratic and Prohibition parties, but, notwithstanding the odds against him, was elected by a majority of 1,700. In 1904 was appointed a member of the following committees: Insurance, Labor and Industries, Privileges and Elections, Indian Affairs. June 17, 1904, nominated for a third term by the Republicans of the 2d Assembly district of Cattaraugus County, by acclamation. Was elected plurality of 2,800, largest ever given candidate for assembly in that district. Chairman committee on Public Health; member committee on insurance and labor and industries. Address, Randolph, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y.

SICKLES, Daniel E.:

Major-general, U. S. Army; born N. Y. City, Oct. 20, 1823; educated at the University of the City of N. Y., but left to learn the printer's trade, which he followed for several years; then studied law, was admitted to the Bar in 1834, and began practice in N. Y. City; in 1847 he was elected to the Legislature, in which body he took rank as a leader of the Democrats; in 1853 was appointed Corporation Counsel of N. Y. City, and on July 30 of the same year he was commissioned as Secretary of Legation at London, and accompanied James Buchanan to England; he returned in 1855, was elected, after an energetic canvass, to the N. Y. State Senate in the autumn, and a year later was chosen a member of Congress, taking his seat on Dec. 7, 1857; was elected for a second term, and served till March 3, 1861; at the beginning of the Civil war he raised the Excelsior Brigade of U. S. Volunteers in N. Y. City, and was commissioned by the President as colonel of one of the five regiments; on Sept. 3, 1861, the President nominated him brigadier-general, and he was subsequently confirmed by the Senate; he commanded a brigade under General

Joseph Hooker, and gained distinction at Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and Malvern Hill; his brigade saw very severe service in the Seven Days' fight before Richmond and in the Maryland campaign, and bore a conspicuous part at Antietam; he succeeded General Hooker in the command of the division, and was engaged at Fredericksburg; on the reorganization of the Army of the Potomac, he was assigned to the command of the Third Army Corps, and was appointed major-general March 7, 1863, his commission dating from Nov. 29, 1862; at Chancellorsville he displayed gallantry and energy, gaining the first success of the day by cutting off an ammunition train of the enemy, arresting a general panic by rallying the retreating artillery and withstanding the force of Stonewall Jackson's attack with determination after the line was formed; at Gettysburg his corps was posted between Cemetery Hill and Little Round Top; he advanced to an elevation which he thought desirable to hold, and in this position was assailed by General James Longstreet's column, while General John B. Hood endeavored to gain the unoccupied slope of Little Round-Top; in the desperate struggle that followed, the Third Corps effectively aided in preserving that important position from the enemy, but was scattered by the onset of overwhelming numbers; after the line was broken, General Ambrose P. Hill followed the Confederate advantage with an attack on Sickles's right, during which General Sickles lost a leg; he continued in active service till the beginning of 1865, and was then sent on a confidential mission to Colombia and other South American countries; on July 28, 1866, he joined the regular army as colonel of the Forty-second infantry; on March 2, 1867, was brevetted brigadier-general for bravery at Fredericksburg, and major-general for gallant and meritorious service at Gettysburg; he commanded the Military District of the Carolinas in 1865-67, and carried out the work of reconstruction so energetically that President Johnson relieved him from his command after first offering him the mission to the Netherlands, which he declined; he was mustered out of the volunteer service on Jan. 1, 1868, and on April 14, 1869, was placed on the retired list of the U. S. Army, with the full rank of major-general; he was active in promoting General Grant for the Presidency, and on May 15, 1869, he was appointed Minister to Spain, but relinquished this post on March 20, 1873, and resumed his residence in N. Y. City; he has been president of N. Y. State Board of Civil Commissioners for several years; sheriff of New York, 1890; in Nov., 1892, he was elected a member of Congress, serving one term. Address, 23 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

SIMMONS, J. Edward:

Banker; born Troy, New York, 1841; received his elementary education in Troy, and in 1858 entered Williams College, where he was graduated in 1862; he then entered upon the study of law in the Albany Law School, and received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1863, and in the same year was admitted to the Bar; he immediately began legal practice in Troy, remaining there until 1867, when he removed to N. Y. City, and engaged there in the business of banking and brokerage; he continued actively engaged in business, and on June 2, 1884, was elected president of the Stock Exchange; he was elected by an unusually large majority, and the following year he was unanimously re-elected; a third was offered him, but he declined renomination; he has several times declined nomination to other important officers where election was sure, among them that of mayor of New York; politically Mr. Simmons is a Democrat, but is in no sense a local partizan or a follower of Tammany; he has rendered his party important assistance in Presidential and other leading contests, and in 1895, after the election of Cleveland to the Presidency, his name was proposed by Samuel J. Tilden and other party leaders, without consulting him, for the position of collector of the port of New York; on learning what was afoot, he immediately declined the honor, and so decisively that the effort for his nomination was dropped; having thus refused to accept a post carrying large patronage and emoluments, he cheerfully accepted one without salary, that of president of the Board of Education, to which he was elected in 1886, on his return from Europe; he had been appointed commissioner of the board in 1881, and served as its president for five years; many beneficial changes were made in the school system during his incumbency; in 1888, mainly through his influence, the legislature passed a bill conferring collegiate rank and powers on the N. Y. Normal College, and he took the deepest interest in the College of New York, working successfully for its development; during his absence in Europe his name was strongly advocated by the business men of the city for the office of mayor, an honor which he declined; in 1888 he was made president of the Fourth National Bank, despite the fact that he owned no stock in the bank, and had no personal acquaintance with any of its directors; he served also as receiver of the American Loan and Trust Co. of New York, a responsible duty which he discharged to the satisfaction of all concerned; was president of the Clearing House in 1898; he has for the past ten years been president of the Panama R. R. Co., and is now vice-president of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce; he has rendered efficient service in the charitable work of the city, having been president for several years of the N. Y. Infant Asylum, and a governor of the N. Y. Hospital; he is now serving his Alma Mater, Williams College, as a trustee; is of high rank in the Masonic Order, and is a member of numerous clubs and societies of New York; in 1888 he was given the degree of LL.D. by the University of Norwich Vt. Address, 28 West 52d St., N. Y. City.

SMITH, Charles Stuart:

Merchant; born Exeter, N. H., March 2, 1832. He received a good education, of an elementary character, in the schools of his native town, but was withdrawn from school when fifteen years of age to begin his business life. He came to N. Y. City at this age in search of employment, which he found in a dry goods jobbing establishment. At twenty-one years of age he joined as a partner the house of S. B. Chittenden & Co., a prominent house of that period. For several years he served this firm as European buyer. Later he became member and senior partner of the dry goods commission firm of Smith, Hogg & Gardiner, whose business grew to be very extensive, and which for years occupied a prominent position in the dry goods business interests of N. Y. and Boston. He remained connected with it as an active member until 1887, when he withdrew. For seven years he held the position of president of the Chamber of Commerce. Politically has avoided office-holding, declining offers of nomination to the mayoralty and other posts, yet he has been warmly interested in public affairs. His attention has been particularly directed to the great problem of municipal transit and to the relation of the railroads to New York commercial needs. On this subject he has written papers and delivered addresses. His retirement from business in 1887 was in no sense a withdrawal from activity, but rather that he might devote more of his attention to the philanthropic, public and other movements in which his interest was enlisted, and to which he has continued to give much of his time, taking a leading part in the affairs of many prominent financial institutions, including the U. S. Trust Co., the Fifth Avenue, Merchants and Fourth National Banks. Trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Clubs of which he is a member include Union League, Grolier, Lawyers, Players, Merchants and Metropolitan. The University of the City of New York has conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL. D., in recognition of his efforts in municipal reform. Address, 25 West 47th St.; office, 320 Broadway, N. Y. City.

SMITH, John Sabine:

Lawyer; born Randolph, Vermont, April 24, 1843. He was forced to gain an education largely through his own efforts, his father having the sparse income of a country physician. He worked during the summer and attended the Orange County grammar school during the winter season, entering Trinity College at sixteen. Through college he was obliged to work his own way, partly by teaching, and to some extent on borrowed money. He persisted, however, and was graduated with first honors at twenty years of age. He then took charge of a select school at Troy, N. Y., saving enough during his four years there to repay his borrowed money, and studying law. Leaving Troy, he taught for one year in the Harrington school at Throgg's Neck, during which time, in 1868, he was admitted to the Bar. In the following year he settled in the City of N. Y., where he became assistant in the office of William E. Curtis, afterwards chief-justice of the Superior Court. He soon began to practice and acquired a lucrative business; he has been connected with the Republican Club of the City of N. Y. for many years. He has been actively identified with its work and management since 1886, and largely instrumental in directing its political activities, holding, through his connection with it, the position of a leader of his party. He took a prominent part in the formation of the Republican League of the U. S., constituted the special committee in charge of the organization of Pennsylvania, and was active in the first national convention of Republican clubs, held in New York, in 1887. In 1888, he was made chairman of the sub-executive committee of the State League, and was practically the manager of the League during the Harrison Presidential campaign. In the same year was elected one of the executive committee of the Republican Club of N. Y. City and acting chairman of its campaign committee. In 1889, he became chairman of the Committee on Municipal Elections, which under his leadership made the famous fight for a straight Republican ticket in the 1890 election campaign. The committee brought out the name of Hon. William L. Strong as candidate for mayor, and Mr. Smith vigorously urged his nomination. In 1891 he was chairman of the Committee of Fifty organized to aid the election of J. Sloat Fasset as governor, in which cause the Republican Club made strenuous efforts, holding five great mass-meetings. In 1892 he was again made chairman of the campaign committee of the club, which now raised a fund of $15,000, and made a most vigorous canvass, carrying on the work throughout the summer and fall. Having served for three years as vice-president of the club, he was elected its president in 1893. During his term he greatly recruited the club membership. He was nominated for surrogate in 1892, and received a larger vote than any other straight Republican candidate ever before named in this city on a national, State, or municipal ticket. In 1893 he was president of the Republican County Committee of New York, and was afterwards member of the Republican State Committee. He belongs to numerous societies, including the University, Lawyers, Republican and Church Clubs, the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and others. He is president of the Society of Medical Jurisprudence, treasurer of the East Side House, trustee of Trinity College, and chairman of the committee appointed to raise funds to erect a new science hall for this institution. Address, University Club, N. Y. City.

SOUTHWICK, George N.:

Member of Congress; Republican of Albany; born 55 Ten Broeck Street, Albany, N. Y., his present residence, March 7, 1863; his parents were Henry C. and Margaret J. Southwick; his early education was acquired at the private school of Mrs. Marvin, on Clinton Avenue, Albany, and later at Public School No. 6, on Second Street, in that city; entered the Albany High School in 1875, whence he was graduated in 1879; although fitted for a collegiate experience, he passed a year in business affairs with his father at Chicago, and his brother at Joliet, Ill.; in the fall of 1880 he entered Williams College, whence he was graduated in 1884; at the commencement exercises of that year his oratorical ability was recognized by his classmates in his selection as pipe orator, and by the faculty in being chosen as one of the Graves prize orators; he entered the Albany Law School, but financial reverses compelled him to seek active business life, and early in 1885 he entered the service of the Albany Morning Express, in both an editorial and a reportorial capacity; he also represented the Associated Press as reporter of proceedings in the Senate and Assembly during the legislative sessions of 1886, 1887 and 1888; in the last-mentioned year he became managing editor of the Morning Express, and early in 1889 of the Albany Evening Journal. His literary activity has extended beyond the field of the daily papers, with which he has been connected as editor, reporter, or correspondent; he has been an occasional contributor to the columns of the magazines, among others the North American Review. He is unmarried. His political career began in the campaign of 1884, with voluntary contributions of editorial articles to the Albany Morning Express, in the interest of James G. Blaine and the Republican and American system of protection to American labor and American industry; in 1888 he stumped Albany County for Benjamin Harrison and Republican principles, and since that year his voice has been heard on the stump throughout the State of New York at every recurring election in the interest of the Republican party; in 1892 he sought the Republican nomination for Congress in the Albany district, but was deterred by factious differences which existed within party lines; in 1894 he secured the Congressional nomination after a hard fight, and won at the election. In 1896 was re-elected to Congress; in March, 1896, he presided as permanent chairman over the stormy scenes of the Republican State Convention in N. Y. City, which selected delegates-at-large to the St. Louis convention in favor of the nomination of Levi P. Morton; in 1898 he was again a candidate for Congress, but was defeated by Martin H. Glynn; in 1900 Mr. Southwick and Mr. Glynn were again the contestants, the former winning, being elected to the Fifty-seventh Congress, and re-elected to the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses. Address, 55 Ten Broeck St., Albany, N. Y.

STARIN, John Henry:

Merchant; born Aug. 27, 1825, Sammonsville, N. Y.; he was educated at the Esperance Academy in Schoharie County, and subsequently studied medicine; he did not, however, care to pursue the medical profession, and entered his brother's drug store in Fultonville as a clerk, remaining there till 1856, when he removed to New York and ventured in business for himself in the line of medicine and toilet articles. He was early successful, building up a profitable business, but was not long so engaged before an opening for larger enterprise declared itself. The transportation of goods, which his business affairs required him to consider, was not at that time very fully developed, and the idea occurred to him of establishing a general freight agency in this city, as likely to prove for the convenience of shippers. He unfolded his plan to a railroad officer, who encouraged him to proceed with it, offering him the patronage of his road, one of the great trunk lines; he closed the contract, sold out his drug business, and entered upon the work of his new enterprise. The Civil War, which broke out shortly afterwards, proved serviceable to him in the establishment of his business, which he quickly developed to such an extent that he was able to serve the government essentially, providing it with transportation for troops and war material at less cost and quicker dispatch than it was able to do with its own means of carriage. By the end of the war he had built up an extensive system of railroad and steamboat connection of the greatest value to mercantile shippers, while his reputation as a reliable business man was high; his trade connections since that period have grown to an enormous extent, he having freight lines on the North and East rivers, fleets of tugs and propellers, lighters and car boats, excursion and pleasure boats, grain boats and floating elevators, while his freight connections extend to all the railroads that come to the rivers surrounding New York, and his dry-docks, freighting depots, and offices are widely distributed along the wharf region of the city. Politically he has always been an earnest republican and has frequently held public positions; from 1848 to 1852, during his early residence at Fultonville, he was postmaster of that place; in 1876 he ran for Congress as representative from the Twentieth District of New York, and was elected; in 1878 he ran again and was returned by a large plurality vote; at the end of this term a third nomination was offered him but he declined to run again, saying that he favored rotation in office, and saw no reason why he should hold the office continually to the detriment of others equally deserving of it. He has been a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce since 1874, and in 1880 was made president, upon the death of Horatio Seymour, of the Saratoga Monument Association, to provide a fitting memorial of the battle that practically decided the result of the war of the Rebellion; in this enterprise he worked energetically, secured for it an appropriation of $30,000 from Congress, added a liberal donation of his own, and induced others to subscribe; as a result of his efforts the memorial has been erected; he belongs to many clubs and societies, and is a trustee of Union College. Address, 9 West 38th St., N. Y. City.

STEDMAN, Edmund Clarence:

Poet, editor, critic; born Hartford, Conn., Oct. 8, 1833; son of Major Edmund and Elizabeth C. Stedman; he entered Yale in his sixteenth year, where he distinguished himself in Greek and English composition, and in 1851 received the first prize for a poem on Westminster Abbey; he was prevented from graduation on account of some breach of discipline, the same university, however, conferring on him in 1871 the degree of A. M., and subsequently that of LL.D.; he has also received the degree of L. H. D. from Columbia; at the age of nineteen he became the editor of the Norwich Tribune, and two years later of the Winsted Herald; in 1856 he went to New York, where contributed to Vanity Fair Putnam's and Harper's Magazines, and to the N. Y. World and the Tribune; his success was not marked, however, until he attracted public attention by his poems of The Diamond Wedding, a satire; The Ballad of Lager Beer, and How Old John Brown Took Harper's Ferry, the fame of which latter secured him a position on the regular staff of the Tribune; his poems were published in 1860 in a volume entitled, Poems Lyrical and Idyllic; during the first two years of the war he was the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. World, but failing health compelled him to accept a less onerous position in the office of Attorney General Bates, which he resigned in 1864 and returned to New York. He entered mercantile business, and became a member of the Stock Exchange in 1869, retaining his seat until 1900. During his business life, Mr. Stedman continued to produce literary work of a high grade, publishing at intervals Alice of Monmouth; an Idyl of the Late War, and Other Poems, and in 1873 a collective edition of his Poetical Works. More recently has devoted his time largely to literary criticism, producing articles on Tennyson, Theocritus, and the Victorian poets, which led directly to his critical volumes, Victorian Poets and Poets of America, and to his Victorian and American Anthologies. In 1888 he took part in editing The Library of American Literature, and in 1889 he gave at Johns Hopkins University a course of lectures on the Nature and Elements of Poetry, which has since been repeated in other institutions of learning, and published in book form. STEWART, John Alkman:

Formerly assistant treasurer of the U. S. at N. Y., and for many years president of the U. S. Trust Co. of that city, born New York, Aug. 22, 1822. His father was of Scottish birth emigrating to this country while quite young and settling in New York, where he was for many years a ward assessor and afterwards receiver of taxes. Mr. Stewart was educated first in a public school of New York, and afterwards entered Columbia College, where he was graduated in 1840, having taken the literary and scientific course of study in that institution. In 1842, being then twenty years of age, he was appointed clerk of Board of Education, a position which he retained until 1850, when he became actuary of the U. S. Life Insurance Co. In 1853, the U. S. Trust Co. of N. Y. was chartered by the State legislature, mainly in consequence of his efforts, and he resigned his former position to accept that of secretary of this new financial institution. He remained in this position until 1864, gaining such confidence and respect for his ability in finance, that in June of the latter year a pressing request was tendered him by President Lincoln and Mr. Fessenden, Secretary of the Treasury, to accept the post of Assistant Treasurer of the U. S. at New York. This office had previously been tendered him by Secretary Chase, and declined. But, now that the war was at its height and the national finances in a state of jeopardy, while public was wavering, he accepted, though at much personal sacrifice, and continued to discharge the onerous and responsible duties of the position with much satisfaction to the government until the end of the war. At this period, Mr Lawrence, president of the U. S. Trust Co., resigned his position, and Mr. Stewart was unanimously elected to succeed him. He accordingly withdrew from the assistant treasurership, which no longer so strongly needed his services, and accepted the presidency offered him. For many years since that date Mr. Stewart continued to discharge the duties of his responsible position in a manner which proved highly profitable to the company and acceptable to its board of directors. Under his control the company became the largest of its kind in America. He is prominently identified with many institutions of the city, being a director in the Merchants' National Bank, the Bank of New Amsterdam, the Greenwich Savings Bank, the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and the Liverpool and London Globe Insurance Co. He is also a director of the N. Y. Eye and Ear Infirmary, a trustee of the John F. Slater Fund, an active trustee of Princeton College, which position he has held for many years. He belongs to the Metropolitan and Union League Clubs, his membership in the latter indicating his political affiliation with the Republicans. Originally he was Democratic in views, but during the Civil War he warmly supported President Lincoln's administration, and has since, though not an extreme high-tariff man, remained a believer in the leading principles of the Republican party. He married, 1845, Miss Sarah Y. Johnson, of N. Y., who died in 1886. In 1890 he married Mary O. Capron, of Baltimore. In 1902 Mr. Stewart resigned the presidency of the company, much to the regret of his associates; is still in the board of directors. Residence, 125 E. 37th St.; office, 45 Wall St., N. Y. City.

STRAUS, Adolph D.:

Consul-general of Nicaragua; has represented Nicaragua for many years as consul-general in the U. S. and in other diplomatic capacities, and is the only citizen in the U. S. holding a military position in the army of Nicaragua. He was formerly one of the best-known war correspondents, being the only journalist who witnessed the execution of Emperor Maximilian, and for a number of years was the representative of the N. Y. Associated Press and correspondent of the N. Y. Times; after severing his connection with the press, he engaged in the export business, and is now senior partner of the house of A. D. Straus & Co. Address, 18 Broadway, N. Y. City.

STRAUS, Isidor:

Eldest son of Lazarus and Sara Straus; born Feb. 6, 1845; the family came to this country in 1854, and settled in Talbotten, Ga., where they had been preceded two years by their father; he was educated at Collinsworth Institute, prepared to enter the Military Academy at West Point, which the breaking out of the Civil War prevented; he was then sixteen years of age, but with the war fever in the air, he wished to enter the service of the Confederate Army; he assisted in the organization of a company, was chosen lieutenant, but was informed by the governor of Georgia that they had not guns enough for men, and they therefore could not arm boys; in 1863 he went to England for an importing company, which was organized to build ships for blockade running purposes. In 1865 the family removed from Georgia to N. Y., and the firm of L. Straus & Son was organized, which in 1872 became L. Straus & Sons; in 1888 he, with his brother Nathan, entered the firm of R. H. Macy & Co., and in 1892 he became a partner in the Brooklyn dry goods firm of Abraham & Straus. Mr. Straus finds time to take an interest in public questions and civic obligations are not ignored; in the campaign of 1892, which resulted in the election of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency, he contributed valuable services in the councils of the Democratic leaders, and it is believed that he might have had the portfolio of Postmaster General had he felt so inclined; in July, 1893, the condition of business was desperate, owing to the alarm about the silver question. Mr. Straus went to Washington to lay before the President the extreme danger of the situation, and explained that nothing but the repeal of the Sherman Act would allay the feeling which threatened a panic; the proclamation convening Congress in special session, which resulted in its repeal, was issued by the President that same afternoon, and it was generally conceded that it was owing to Mr. Straus' influence that the important step was decided upon; he was a member of the Fifty-third Congress, but declined re-election; while the Committee on Ways and Means was considering the tariff bill, he lent his hearty support and co-operation to its chairman, Mr. William L. Wilson, whose bosom friend he was, and for this his practical experience as a merchant, combined with his knowledge of the economic side of the question, particularly fitted him. In the field of philanthropy he holds a place equally as prominent as his position in the business world; the Educational Alliance, the People's Palace, of the congested tenement district of New York's East Side, of which he is the president, owes its present position as one of the great factors in the solution of the sociological problems among the tenements of the metropolis to his indomitable perseverance and intelligently directed energy. He is a director in many and a supporter of almost every philanthropic and charitable institutions of N. Y., regardless of creed; he is a director of several banks and financial institutions, a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, vice-president of the J. Hood Wright Memorial Hospital, and is connected with most of the institutions whose sphere cover the field of science, art, education, charity and philanthropy. Address, 2 475 Broadway; office, Broadway and 34th St., N. Y. City.

SULLIVAN, Edward J.:

United States Consul; was educated in the public schools and placed under the private tutorage of an eminent teacher. Took a course in commercial law with the purpose of entering the legal profession. He, however, abandoned the idea, and entered a commercial career. While actively engaged in business he devoted his spare hours to writing for newspapers and magazines. Mr. Sullivan is considered an authority on the Tariff Question, and his opinions have been frequently sought on that subject. He has travelled extensively in America and Europe. He also made a study of life insurance in all its bearings and took a course of lectures and studies under the late Charlton T. Lewis, Actuary of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. Was appointed Consul to Erzerum on Aug. 6, 1903, by President Roosevelt, and when the Consulate was transferred from that city to Trebizonde, he was appointed Consul to Trebizonde, April 30, 1904. His success in the promotion of American manufacture has been phenomenal and has introduced modern business methods into Turkey. Member Catholic Club, Society of the Genesee Army and Navy League, Commercial Travellers Association, S. Y. L. Club, S. A. League, Tariff Club, I. N. L. Club and Ninth Assembly District Republican Club; is unmarried and his N. Y. City address is the Catholic Club, 120 Central Park South, N. Y. City.

SWIFT, Lewis, F. R. S.:

Astronomer; born Clarkson, N. Y., Feb. 29, 1820; son of General Lewis and Anna Forbes Swift Lewis; at the age of thirteen years he had the misfortune or otherwise to break his left hip bone, from which through defective surgery he has since been lame. In 1854, without a teacher, he took up the subject of practical astronomy in Marathon, N. Y., with a four and one-half inch comet-seeker, with which, there, in Rochester, and California, he discovered over a dozen new comets, the first at Marathon (on a platform he built on the gable of his barn), with a period of 123 years, having orbital elements identical with the August 10th star shower. In 1872 he moved to Rochester, selecting as an observing place, to avoid street lights, a dark alley; soon after he moved his telescope to the large, flat roof of Walter B. Duffy's cider mill, which cut off all street lights, where in five years he discovered six new comets. The people of Rochester presented him with $12,500, with which he purchased a sixteen-inch Clark refractor, a spectro-scope, and a sidereal clock. Mr. H. H. Warner built him an expensive observatory, in which he discovered, in addition to several comets, 900 new nebulae. At Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California, 3,500 feet above the Pacific, he discovered, before his sight failed him, 342 more nebulae, placing him in point of numbers next to Sir John Herschel, all were measured and described in Astronomische Nachrichten. For his discoveries he has received three gold medals from Austria; the La Land prize, a silver medal, and 540 francs; and five of bronze, one a large one from the Royal Astronomical Society of England, or nine in all, being more than any other astronomer ever received; also $500 from Mr. Warner. Ph. D., was conferred on him by the University of Rochester; elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society of England, and by Canada and elected an honorary member of the Astronomical Society of Mexico. Address, Marathon, N. Y.

TAGGART, Marion Ames:

Author; born Haverhill, Mass.; is the daughter of Alfred Gilchrist Taggart and Sarah Porter Ames; descended on the paternal side from pure Scotch ancestry, the patronymic was originally Mactaggart; her ancestors settled in New Hampshire in Colonial days. On the mother's side is descended from old New England

Colonial stock, her grandfather being the Captain Ames, who fought at Bunker Hill. She never went to school, the exceeding delicacy of her health necessitating education at home; born in a household of book lovers, her education was largely reading, from her fifth year, of the older English poets and classics. An only child, excitable and imaginative, she spent most of her childhood and youth apart from comrades of her own age, and this doubtless fostered the strong bent of her mind toward verse and prose writing. She began contributing to magazines in her fourteenth year, and has continued doing so to the present date. Of late her work has been chiefly for children, the branch of literary work in which she has always been most interested. She has produced many books, seven of which were published by Benziger Bros., New York: The Wyndham Girls (was published by the Century Co. in 1902); Miss Lochinvar (by Appleton in the same year); At Aunt Anna's (by Appleton in 1903). She will bring out The Little Grey House (through McClure, Phillips & Company, and she is to publish several other books, already planned and placed. Marion Ames Taggart's home was Boston in her early childhood until she removed to Plainfield, N. J., for her mother's health, and her home has been in N. Y. City for the past nine years, where her most important work has been done and her reputation made; she owns a summer home at Paradise Valley, Pa., in the Pocono Mountains. Contributor to Youth's Companion, St. Nicholas, the Catholic World, and to the Independent. Author: Asa the Shepherd, which has been translated into Italian and republished in Italy. Address, 102 Waverly Place, N. Y. City.

TAGGART, William Rush:

THOMPSON, J. Walter:

Advertising agent; born Pittsfield, Mass., Oct. 28, 1847. His parents removed to Ohio while he was still quite young, and the early part of his life, including its educational period, was passed in that State; he came to New York, early in the sixties, in which city he shortly afterwards entered upon a mercantile career. This first venture in the active business life was made in 1864, when he was seventeen years of age; he began his career in the metropolis under the same conditions as did Horace Greeley and many others who have achieved success, being without money and without influence, but possessed of that energy and spirit of enterprise which, as a rule, win good fortune by commanding it. He was employed in a minor capacity, in that field of labor which was to become the work of his later life, his first position being that of clerk in an advertising establishment; later he entered into business on his own account securing control of a number of theatre programmes as profitable channels for advertising; to these he soon added the programmes of several New York theatres; the first stage in his independent career was followed by others, and by an advance in position in the firm in whose service he was engaged, until he eventually purchased and became successor to its business; to this business he has, since acquiring complete control of it, steadily added, developing its importance and magnitude, particularly in the special field of magazine advertising. Mr. Thompson married, 1877, Margaret

R. Bogle, daughter of the late James Bogle, the celebrated portrait painter, and a prominent member of the New York Academy of Design. Address, 41 Park Row, N. Y. City.

TILFORD, Frank:

Banker and business man; son of John M. Tilford; born N. Y. City, July 22, 1852; educated in private schools and Mount Washington Collegiate Institute, and at an early age entered business with his father's firm of Park & Tilford. By successive steps and in course of time, he became a partner, and later, upon the death of his father in 1890, succeeded him as vice-president and director, which positions he still holds. In 1874, at the age of 22, he made his entrance into banking circles and was chosen a director of the 6th National Bank, at which time he was the youngest bank director in the city. In 1885 he was elected trustee of the North River Savings Bank. In 1889, with George G. Haven, he organized the Bank of New Amsterdam, now the New Amsterdam National Bank, and became its vice-president, and in 1896 he was elected president. In January, 1901, the deposits were over $7,000,000, and the value of the stock had risen to $725 per share. At this time Mr. Tilford sold his interest and severed his connection with the bank and shortly afterwards organized and established the Fifth Avenue Trust Company, of which institution he was trustee for several years. He sold his interest in 1902, organizing the very successful Lincoln Trust Company, which occupies a well appointed office building on Fifth avenue. Of this institution he is vice-president and also chairman of the executive committee. In addition to the large trade and banking interests, Mr. Tilford is largely interested in lighting companies, being president of the Standard Gas Light Co., The New York and Queens Gas

Co., The New York and Queens Electric Light and Power Co., in all of which he takes a very active interest. He is also a trustee in the Consolidated Gas Company, a director of the Williamsport Gas Co., The Quincy Gas and Electric Co., and the Gas Industries Co. Mr. Tilford's versatility and attainments are well evidenced by the multiplicity of his interests, he being also identified with and a director in many other enterprises. He was one of the presidential electors in 1900, was instrumental in the success of the Grant monument, also being a member of the executive committee. His sincere patriotism was recently particularly manifested by a generous gift of a colossal bust of Washington to each of the public schools of the Borough of Manhattan. The presentations with appropriate ceremonies, in January, 1902, commanded wide attention and flattering comment. Mr. Tilford's philanthropic interests are as large and varied as his business affairs, being a director and active in the management of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, in which he recently established an ear clinic, the People's Institute, The N. Y. School of Applied Design for Women, The Fairhaven Sanitorium, The Metropolitan Parks Association, and other associations. He is also a director in the N. Y. Symphony Orchestra, The National Art Theatre Society, The Municipal Art Society, and is a member of the Sons of the Revolution; N. Y. Historical Society; Chamber of Commerce, N. Y. Board of Trade and Transportation. He is an ardent yachtsman and owner of the magnificent steam yacht Norman. He was commodore of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club for many years and holds memberships in many clubs, among which are the Union League, Lotos, Colonial, Riding, Automobile Club of America, Republican, Indian Harbor, Larchmont, Seawanahaka-Corinthian, Manhasset Bay and New York Yacht Clubs. He spent a long time in Europe, and was for several years lecturer on assaying and metallurgy in the Dexter School of Mines of London. Returning to Arizona, he began a series of investigations into the great copper deposits in the Verde Copper Belt, and subsequently becoming president of the George A. Treadwell Mining Co., a position he still holds. Address, Waldorf Astoria Hotel; office, 27 William St., N. Y. City.

TREMAIN, Henry Edwin:

Lawyer; born N. Y. City, Nov. 14, 1840; son of Edwin R. Tremain, and a member of a fighting family, being the brother of Lieutenant Walter R. Tremain, who died in the service, and the cousin of Colonel Frank W. and Major Frederick

L. Tremain, both slain in battle near the end of the war. He received his education at the College of the City of New York, graduating in 1860, and at once beginning a course of legal study at Columbia College Law School. While he was thus engaged the war broke out, and he immediately (April 17, 1861) enlisted as a private in the New York Seventh Regiment, served with it during its first brief campaign, and soon after, in association with his brother, recruited a company in New York, and went to the front as first lieutenant in the Second Regiment of Fire Zouaves (Seventy-third New York Volunteers), which was attached to the famous Excelsior Brigade. He served in the line and as adjutant of this regiment till April, 1862, when, at the siege of Yorktown, he was promoted to the staff of General Nelson Taylor, then commanding the Excelsior Brigade, and as such served during the Peninsular campaign and subsequently under General Pope; taking part in all the principal engagements before Richmond and in the battles of Pope's campaign, ending with the unfortunate second Bull Run. During the last named battle, while participating in a charge, he was taken prisoner, and was forced for a time to endure the inhospitalities of Libby Prison; being one of a number held there as hostages to be executed by lot in case General Pope continued the destruction of Virginia property. Fortunately the cartel for the exchange of prisoners was just then agreed upon, and after a few weeks' confinement Lieutenant Tremain was released on parole, and subsequently exchanged, promoted captain, and returned to duty as assistant inspector-general on the staff of General Sickles, now in command of his old division (Second Division of the Third Army Corps). Lieutenant Tremain received high commendation for his services in several of the Peninsular engagements, and his gallantry at the second Bull Run battle was warmly praised by his commander. He served in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, in the latter as major (his commission dating April 25, 1863), his gallantry at Chancellorsville being so notable that he was specially recommended for a brevet; at Gettysburg he, as chief staff officer of the Third Army Corps, gained great distinction; in 1864 he served as aide to General Butterfield at Chattanooga, took part in the engagements around Dalton and at

Resaca, and was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for "distinguished conduct" in the latter battle. Later in that year he was, at his special request, assigned to duty with the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, served as aide to Generals Gregg and Crook, and took part in all the cavalry engagements of the Petersburg campaign till the end of the war; was commended by General Crook for gallantry during this campaign, brevetted lieutenant-colonel, on General Sheridan's recommendation, at its termination, afterwards brevetted colonel. On Nov. 30, 1865, he was promoted brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, and sent on duty to South Carolina, where he, in April, 1866, resigned from the service, returned to New York and entered upon the practice of the law. He was graduated from Columbia Law School in 1867, having already gained a promising legal business. In 1869 he formed with Colonel Mason W. Tyler the well known legal firm of Tremain & Tyler, more than twenty-five years in active business. He was nominated for judge of the Common Pleas in 1870, but defeated at the polls, his party being in the minority; in 1881 was repeatedly voted for by many members of the Legislature in joint convention for the United States senatorship. In his law business he has frequently been employed by the United States government, and has practiced much in the United States Supreme Court. General Tremain has been active as a Republican in every Presidential contest since the war. He has contributed considerably to the press and was one of the founders and editors of the Daily Law Journal; was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic in New York, and served for a number of years as president of the Alumni of the College of the City of New York, and in 1901 was president of the Republican Club of the City of New York. TRUAX, Charles H.:

Justice Supreme Court of the State of New York; born Durhamville, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1846; son of Henry P. Truax, a descendant of Philippe du Trieux, a Wallon, who came to the Island of Manhattan about 1623; student Hamilton College 1867, A. M., LL. D. Received his education at Vernon Academy, at Oneida Seminary, and finally at Hamilton College; left college in his junior year, but the college afterwards conferred on him in 1876 the degree of A. M., and in 1890 that of LL. D. During his period of school life he taught a part of each year—from 1862 to 1868. In the latter year he came to New York, and entered the office of his uncle, Chauncey W. Shaffer, for the study of law. He progressed so rapidly in this line of study that he was admitted to the Bar before the close of that year, and entered at once into practice, at first in association with his uncle, but in the following year by himself. On Nov. 2, 1880, he was elected judge of the Superior Court—a fourteen-year judgeship, and which he held to the end of his term in 1894. During this incumbency many important decisions were given by Judge Truax, among them that in the case of Williams vs. the Western Union Telegraph Co., which affirmed the right of companies to consolidate and issue new stock; this decision was appealed from and reversed by the General Term, but was subsequently sustained and reaffirmed by the Court of Appeals. Another decision given by him, of the greatest importance as regards the rights of private real estate owners, was that declared May 2, 1887, in the case of Abendroth vs. the New York Elevated R. R. Co.; again elected justice of the Supreme Court, Jan., 1896, for full term. Married, first, Nancy C. Stone, Camden, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1871; second, Caroline Sanders, New York, March 4, 1896. TRUAX, Chauncey S.:

Lawyer; born March 11, 1854; is one of the most successful lawyers of N. Y. City, and a member of the 1894 constitutional convention of the State of New York. Shortly after his graduation from the Law School of Columbia College he was appointed to a professorship in Robert College, Constantinople, an institution founded during the Crimean War, and which has been of much service in adding to the higher educational facilities of that Oriental city. Mr. Truax served there as professor for a year and a half, and took this opportunity to pursue researches in history and ancient law, in which he was earnestly interested. He visited all the classical localities in doing so, and went carefully over the site of Troy while Dr. Schliemann was making his celebrated excavations there. Since his return to this country he has been very actively engaged in legal practice, in which he has had great professional success. Member of Metropolitan, Manhattan and Democratic Clubs. VALENTINE, Benjamin Bennaton ("Fitznoodle")

Author; born London, England, Sept. 7, 1843; only son of Benjamin Vallentine, merchant, who was a Freeman of the city of London, and was also in business in Birmingham, England; Hobart, Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, educated at King Edward the Sixth's School, Birmingham, England, having been nominated by Lord Calthrope, lord lieutenant of the county of Warwickshire. When a youth he joined his father in Australia; he began his business career as a clerk in the office of a firm of shipping, commission and Eastern produce merchants in Sydney; sent as supercargo of a vessel belonging to the house on a voyage to the East Indies. Served for three years in the New South Wales Volunteer Artillery; was a member of the Sydney Literary Association, and a colleague as a young man of George Houston Reid, now the Right Hon. George H. Reid, formerly Prime Minister of New South Wales, and now head of the government of the commonwealth of Australia. Contributed articles to Sydney newspapers, read for the English Bar. Returned to England in 1870 in order to become barrister of the Middle Temple, the Franco-Prussian War prevented him from carrying out his plans. After a visit to Brazil, he came to the U. S. in 1871 and became a partner in a foreign shipping and commission house; after the panic of 1873, withdrew from the business and became a writer for newspapers on dramatic subjects, contributing to New York Star, American Athenaeum, the late Nym Crinkle's Arcadian, and other papers; he was one of the founders of Puck in 1877 and originated the Fitznoodle papers in that publication, writing the editorials and inspiring the principal and most effective cartoons which were drawn by the late Joseph Keppler; he left Puck at the end of 1884 and sued the nominal editor, H. C. Bunner, for breach of contract, and won the two suits for the full amount claimed. He has traveled extensively in Europe; in Rome in 1889 he had private interview with the late Pope Leo. XIII. He was for a year managing editor of Texas Sittings; also of the novelist Irving Bacheller's newspaper syndicate; joined the staff of Albert Pulitzer's Morning Journal and then became an editorial writer on the Mail and Express; he subsequently was made financial editor of the Evening Telegram and wrote special articles for that paper; was afterwards a dramatic critic of New York Herald; also for some time one of editors of the Sunday edition, having special charge of comic department; other positions occupied by him on the Herald were assistant foreign editor, special writer, and art editor. With the late Rev. Dr. Hepworth and Mr. William Walsh, he was appointed by James Gordon Bennett one of the judges of the novels, short stories and epic poems for the New York Herald's $25,000.00 competition in 1897, in which Mr. Julian Hawthorne won the $10,000 prize. Mr. Vallentine was compiler and author of the dramatic biographies in Johnson's Encyclopædia, published by D. Appleton & Co.; also revising and bringing up to date those articles written by William Winter in a former edition; associate and biographical editor of the banker-poet Edmund Clarence Stedman's History of the New York Stock Exchange; was secretary of committee of American Dramatists Club appointed to present to the public a project for a National American endowed theatre; Augustus Thomas, William Gillette and Joseph L. C. Clarke (the latter now Sunday editor of the Herald) were also on the committee. He has written many short stories and magazine articles; also several plays produced in New York and other cities; they include: A Southern Romance; In Paradise; Fitznoodle; Fritz in New York; Madame Saccard (authorized version of Emile Zola's drama of Renee), version of Daudet's Sapho; A Parisian Mystery, etc. At the request of W. VIZETELLY, Francis (Frank) Horace:

Author, editor; born Camden Hill, Kensington, London, England, April 2, 1864; youngest surviving son of the late Henry Vizetelly and Elizabeth Anne Ansell, of Broadstairs, Kent. He received his early education in France, at the Ecole des Frères Chrétiens, Passy, near Paris. At the close of the Franco-Prussian War (1871) the family, which had remained in France throughout the hostilities, removed to Nogent-sur-Marne, near Paris, where he entered the Lycée Baudard, whence he graduated in 1874. Returning to England on the death of his mother (1874), Mr. Vizetelly was articulated at Arnold College, Eastbourne, Sussex (1877-81), where he took a commercial course. Returning to London in 1883, Mr. Vizetelly entered into business with his father and brother (Arthur) as publishers, under the style of Vizetelly & Co., being appointed business manager. The firm engaged in issuing translations from French, German, Russian and Spanish authors, and was the first to introduce the works of Emile Gaboriau, F. du Boisgobey, Prosper Merimée, Théophile Gautier, Gustave Flaubert, Alphonse Daudet, Georges Ohnet, Emile Zola, Nicholas Gogol, Féodor Dostoieffsky, and Leo Tolstoy to English readers. Owing to the suppression of the works of M. Zola (1889) the firm went into liquidation, and in Feb., 1891, Mr. Vizetelly sailed for New York, where he joined the editorial staff of the Standard Dictionary as critical reviewer, and also prepared the definitions of the wines. From the date of publication of that work he was the assistant of its chief editor, Dr. Isaac K. Funk, in all subsequent editions issued (1894-1902), and in 1903 became associate editor. In 1892 he was associate editor of and contributor to Home and Country Magazine, and in 1894 on the completion of the Standard Dictionary, was associated with James C. Fernald on abridgements of that work. He supervised Hoyt's Cyclopaedia of Practical Quotations (1894), and revised Little's Cyclopaedia of Classified Dates (1899). On June 6, 1894, he married Bertha Krehbiel, a daughter of Mr. Herman Krehbiel, of New York. In 1895 he was engaged with Dr. William Fankhauser and the late Dr. Charles Rice of Bellevue Hospital, N. Y., in the preparation of Merck's Chemical Index. Associated with Richard Greene, in 1897, he revised the Columbian Encyclopædia, writing for it a number of articles on field-sports, mechanics, engineering, and other general topics; and later was appointed private secretary to Dr. Isaac K. Funk. In 1899 he was elected secretary of the editorial board of The Jewish Encyclopaedia, and, under the guidance of Dr. I. K. Funk, manager of the editorial department of this undertaking. In 1901 Mr. Vizetelly went to Bermuda to investigate the conditions of the camps of the Boer prisoners of war detained there, and through the courtesy of Sir G. Digby Barker, the governor, and his adjutant, Lieutenant-colonel M. Quayle-Jones, C. B., was the first civilian given free access to the camps. Among his writings are: The Boer as a Prisoner of War; With the Marooned Boers; A Reply to Allegations of British Inhumanity; With the Boers in Bermuda; Balmy Bermuda; The Division of Words; The Fan in Romance and History; The Romance of the Finger-ring; The Story of the Wheel; The Sunshade and the Umbrella; From Rushmat to Folding Bed; From Pouch Purse to Pocket Book; The Story of the Pocket Handkerchief; The Story of the Stocking, A Manual on the Preparation of Manuscripts for the Printer, etc. Mr. Vizetelly has contributed to Appleton's Annual Encyclopædia, The Jewish Encyclopædia; The Encyclopædia of Temperance; The Illustrated London News; The Independent (N. Y.); the N. Y. Sun; the N. Y. Times; St. Nicholas Magazine; the Woman's Home Companion; and papers on the technical side of book-making to the Typographical Journal and the International Printer. In April, 1903, he was elected Fellow of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce, London, England. Residence, 2460 Seventh Ave.; office, care Funk & Wagnalls Co., 44-60 East 23d St., N. Y. City.

WALKER, John Brisben:

Born on the Monongahela, Pa., near the Virginia border, 1847. He spent ten years in classical schools, going from the University of Georgetown to West Point. While at the Military Academy he received an offer to enter the Chinese Military service, and accompanied the United States Minister, Hon. Ross Brown, to Peking, immediately thereafter entering upon his duties in the Chinese army. Returning home after two years he engaged in manufacturing and was nominated on the Republican ticket for Congress, but failed of election. In 1876 he assumed charge of the Daily Chronicle, then one of the two leading daily papers in Washington City. In 1879 he removed with his family to Colorado. There he was the first to introduce alfalfa on an extended scale—a plant which has since become one of the chief resources of that state. At the same time he engaged in a series of engineering operations which rescued a considerable portion of the Platte River in the very heart of Denver from overflow. Returning East in 1888, he purchased the Cosmopolitan Magazine and established his publishing plant on the Hudson. Later on he issued the Twentieth Century Home. He has been a writer on educational and governmental topics, and has taken a constant interest in politics. He was a member of the Board of Governors which organized the Ardsley Country Club. Member Century Club; was in 1904 elected an honorary member Automobile Club of America in recognition of his services in introducing and advancing the automobile in America, and in 1904 was elected president of the Nineteenth Century Club, although at the time of his election not a member of the club. WATSON, Benjamin Frank:

Born Warner, N. H., April 30, 1826. Admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1850, and subsequently to that of the Supreme Court of the U. S. He was the counsel in the leading case against the U. S. for the burning of Columbia and Camden, S. C., by General Sherman, and as counsel for the owner, he successfully prosecuted the petition, under the Fugitive Slave Law, for the return to slavery of the slave Betty before Chief Justice Lemuel Shaw at Boston, with John A. Andrew as counsel opposing on behalf of the excited populace. He was editor and proprietor of the Lawrence (Massachusetts) Sentinel; Postmaster, City Solicitor, and Delegate to the famous Democratic National Convention at Charleston, S. C., and Baltimore in 1860. As major, he offered the resolution passed by the colonel and officers of the Sixth Regiment of Massachusetts Militia, Jan. 19, 1861, tendering, through Governor John A. Andrew, to President Elect Abraham Lincoln, its services in case of need, thus distinguishing "the Old 6th" as the first regiment to volunteer in the War of the Rebellion, as it was the first in the field, and the first to shed its blood, and to force a way for the loyal troops through Baltimore to Washington. He, as major in command of one of the separated detachments of the regiment in Baltimore on the 19th of April, 1861, ordered the shedding of the first blood in the conflict of the Great Rebellion. His ancestors fought at the Battle of Bunker Hill and were in the War of 1812. Shortly after the affair of Baltimore, he was chosen lieutenant colonel of "the Old 6th" by the commissioned officers, and took command thereof upon the promotion of the colonel, and he was subsequently promoted to be brevet colonel, U. S. V., after declining the command of another regiment. He was appointed and served as paymaster, U. S. V., and became disabled in the service, and declining appointment to the Veteran Reserve Corps, he resigned from the army about Oct., 1864. He was president of the Massachusetts Minute Men of 1861, and of the Old 6th Regiment Association and was, by the latter, appointed to write the history of its Baltimore campaign, which was adopted as the correct history and ordered to be printed and placed in the principal libraries of the country. Colonel Watson was active in the practice of his profession in N. Y. City, from 1867 to 1900, when he retired and has since devoted much of his time to benevolent work, mostly among working boys and young men, and especially in connection with the Church Temperance Legion of which he was president and one of the founders. Member Lafayette Post, G. A. R., and of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and of other societies. Address, 445 Park Ave., N. Y. City.

WATSON, Henry Chapman:

Editor, and writer on financial and industrial subjects; born Port Chester, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1870; son of Willam W. and Jane Bircham Watson. Moving to New York at an early age became associated with newspaper work, writing chiefly on financial and business topics. He has been connected with Dun's Review ever since that publication was started, and succeeded W. M. Grosvenor as its editor on the latter's death. The statistics of failures, prices of commodities and records of securities, etc., prepared by him have been adopted as the standard by the government at Washington and by such unofficial publications as the almanacs and year books, and his work on financial and industrial subjects in general is considered of great value. His compilation known as Dun's Index Number, showing variations in the cost of living, attracted much attention in the Department of Sociology at the St. Louis Exposition. As a member of the staff of the New York Tribune, he prepares for that journal each Monday the editorial entitled: Money and Business. Contributor to various publications, such as Prosperity and the Cost of Living, (Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post); The Industrial Outlook, (New York Commercial Advertiser), etc. Has given much attention to the work of the National Civic Federation, serving on its conciliation committee. Takes great interest in athletics and indoor and outdoor games; member American Academy of Political and Social Science, National Geographic Society, Englewood Golf Club, Lawyers Club. President of the Englewood Field Club, and a governor of the Englewood club; competitor in whist and billiard tournaments. Married Gwendolen Reid, at Englewood, N. J., May 10, 1901. Residence, Englewood, N. J.; office, 290 Broadway, N. Y. Cty.

WATSON, Henry M.:

President of the Bell Telephone Co. of Buffalo. When he removed from Albany to Buffalo in 1868 he was elected secretary and treasurer of the Buffalo Street R. R. Co. Three years later he became secretary and treasurer of the Buffalo East Side Ry. Co., and upon the death of Stephen Van Rensselaer Watson in 1881, he was elected president of the Buffalo Street R. R. Co. Both systems were afterward consolidated with the Buffalo Ry. Co. In Nov., 1890, the Buffalo Street R. R., the Buffalo East Side Ry. and Buffalo West Side Street R. R. were consolidated into the Buffalo Ry. Co., and Mr. Watson was elected president. In 1900 he resigned from the presidency and although he no longer fills an executive position in the street traffic world, he retains holdings in, and is still a director of the International Ry. Co., which, with headquarters at Buffalo, connects that city with various points in Canada. When Colonel Watson assumed executive direction of the street railway system the component companies were not models of adequate service, nor were they in a prosperous condition. He surrounded himself by capable coadjutors, and inaugurated a policy of liberality which was soon appreciated by the public. It is conceded that no city in the U. S. now possesses a better street railway system than Buffalo. In 1882 he was instrumental in founding the American Street Ry. Association, which embraces the U. S. and Canada, and was elected president at the convention held in 1890. He had been elected previously (1885) to the presidency of the Street Ry. Association of the State of New York. Born Unadilla, N. Y., and in 1857 went to Albany, where for ten years, he was engaged in the banking business. From 1865 to 1867 he was general passenger agent of the Albany and Susquehanna R. R., now part of the Delaware and Hudson System. Then followed his removal to Buffalo. While residing in Albany, Colonel Watson was one of the founders, in 1861, of Company A, Tenth Regiment, N. G.,

N. Y. In 1865 he was promoted to a second lieutenantcy. He served as an active member and officer for seven years, and is still an honorary member of the Old Guard. On Jan. 1, 1880, he was appointed aide-de-camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governor Alonzo B. Cornell. He served in this capacity throughout the Cornell Administration. Is a trustee of the Erie County Savings Bank and of the Union Fire Insurance Co. He is a director and a member of the Executive Committee of the Fidelity Trust Co.; member Saturn and Buffalo Clubs, Fort Orange Club, Albany, Genesee Valley Club of Rochester, life member of the Buffalo Library; member of the Buffalo Historical Society and a vestryman of Trinity Church. Since the organization of the Bell Telephone Co., of Buffalo, in 1879, Colonel Watson has been its president. Address, Office of Bell Telephone Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

WEBB, Alexander Stewart:

Late president of the College of the City of N. Y.; born New York, Feb. 15, 1835; son of Gen. James Watson and Helen Lisenard Webb. He was graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1855, and was appointed a second lieutenant in the Fourth Artillery. Within six months from his graduation he was on active service with his regiment in Florida in quelling the uprisings of the Seminole Indians. He was for three years immediately preceding the Civil War principal assistant professor of mathematics and principal assistant professor of geography, history and ethics at the same institution for several years after the war. During the Civil War his services were of the most active and valuable nature. He participated in seventeen different actions and battles, among them Mechanicsville, Antietam, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, the Wilderness and Spottsylvania. He was brevetted major and awarded a medal of honor "for distinguished personal gallantry in the battle of Gettysburg." He also received the brevets of lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general for distinguished services. He was in command of the Second Division of the Second Army Corps in several important engagements. He was severely wounded at Gettysburg in 1863, and again at Spottsylvania in 1864. He served in various positions after the war, until December 31, 1870, when he was honorably discharged from the army at his own request. He was president of the College of the City of N. Y. from 1869 to 1903, and the justice and wisdom of his administration of this great institution of learning won for him the esteem and admiration of its officers and teachers. He is commander-general of the Military Order of Foreign Wars; author: The Peninsula; McClellan's Campaign of 1862. Address, Riverdale, N. Y.

WEBB, William Seward:

Capitalist; son of General James Watson Webb; born New York, Jan. 31, 1851. His grandfather, General Samuel B. Webb, was a Revolutionary officer of distinction, commanding a regiment at Bunker Hill, and afterwards serving on the staffs of Putnam and Washington. He was an intimate friend of General Washington. William Seward Webb was educated by private tutors, and afterwards spent five years in the military school of Colonel Churchill at Sing Sing. The succeeding two years were spent at Columbia College. He had early shown a strong predilection for medical study, and after the completion of his college course determined to make medicine his profession. He accordingly entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, graduating in 1875, and afterwards spent two years in study in the medical schools of Vienna. In 1881 he married Lila Osgood Vanderbilt, daughter of the railroad magnate, William H. Vanderbilt, and soon after an abundant channel for his energies was opened in connection with the Vanderbilt railroad system. He possessed an excellent natural business faculty which quickly became manifest in his management of the Wagner Palace Car Co., of which he was president for many years. Another interest, of a different kind, which fell into his hands, was the construction of the Adirondack and St. Lawrence R. R., a line which extends through the Adirondack wilderness from Herkimer, N. Y., to the St. Lawrence River, a distance of two hundred and thirty-three miles. This undertaking was solely managed by him, and since 1891 he has been president of the company. His interests now extend to a considerable number of railroad and other corporations, in each of which he is director or holds other official position, his business connections being very diversified. For three years he held the position of president-general in the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution,—an organization which differs essentially in the character of its membership from the similarly named Sons of the Revolution. He is vice-president of the Vermont Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. To his Shelburne Farms estate in Vermont he adds a large preserve in the Adirondacks, which is known by the title of Ne-ha-sa-ne Park. It is made up of forest, hill, and lake, its woods being well stocked with game, its waters with fish. Politically he is a strong supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Member Metropolitan, Riding, University, Church, Turf and Field, and New York Yacht Clubs. Address, 680 Fifth Ave.; office, 51 East 44th St., N. Y. City.

He went to Syracuse with his parents in 1869, and has resided there ever since; there he attended the public schools and the high school, and thence entered Cornell University, graduating with honors in 1887. After studying law two years in ex-Senator Hiscock's office, he took the law course at Columbia Law School; was admitted to the Bar in May, 1890, and then studied for another year in Mr. Hiscock's office; then formed a partnership with Harry F. King, on whose death in Feb., 1893, he formed a partnership with Jerome L. Cheney, which still continues. Mr. White was elected Senator in 1895; re-elected in 1898, 1900, 1902 and 1904. In 1903 he was appointed a member of the following Senate committees: Chairman of the committees on Cities, member of Canals, Public Education and Indian Affairs. Address, Syracuse, N. Y.

WHITE, Horace, M. A., LL.D.:

Editor; son of Horace White, M. D., and Elizabeth McClary Moore White; born at Colebrook, N. H., Aug. 10, 1834. In 1837 the family removed to that part of Wisconsin territory where the city of Beloit now stands—at that time unoccupied. Horace entered Beloit College in 1849, and was graduated in 1853; in 1854 he went to Chicago and secured a position on the staff of the Evening Journal of that city; in 1855 was appointed agent of the New York Associated Press in Chicago. In 1856 the Kansas war broke out and Mr. White was appointed assistant secretary of the National Kansas Committee, whose headquarters were in Chicago. In 1857 he decided to settle in Kansas, and went thither and filed a claim for 160 acres of land, which, however, he did not perfect, since, upon his return to Chicago to close up his business affairs, he received an advantageous offer of a position as editorial writer on the Chicago Tribune, the chief editor of which was Dr. Charles H. Ray. In 1858, while holding this position, he was designated as staff correspondent to accompany Abraham Lincoln in his political campaign against Stephen A. Douglas for the office of Senator of the United States. The notable features of this campaign were given to the public chiefly through his letters to the Chicago Tribune, and were subsequently written out by him, at the instance of William H. Herndon, and published in the latter's Life of Lincoln. In 1861 Mr. White was sent to Washington as correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, and while there he filed successively the places of clerk of the Senate committee on Military Affairs and clerk in the War Department. In the latter capacity he was assigned to the special service of P. H. Watson, assistant and later of Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War. In 1865 he became part owner and chief editor of the Chicago Tribune, which place he filled until Sept., 1874, when he resigned and was succeeded by Mr. Joseph Medill; he spent the year 1875 in Europe. In 1877 he removed to New York and became associated with Henry Villard in the latter's railroad enterprises, especially that of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, of which he was the treasurer for the next few years. In 1881 he joined with Mr. Villard in the purchase of the New York Evening Post, of which he became the president and one of the editors, in conjunction with Carl Schurz and Edwin L. Godkin. Mr. Schurz retired in 1884, Mr. Godkin in 1899, and Mr. White in 1903. Mr. White is best known by his contributions to the various campaigns for Sound Money that have been fought in the political arena since the close of the Civil War. In addition to his editorial work he has been a frequent contributor to the magazines and pamphlet literature of that period. In 1895 he wrote a book entitled Money and Banking Illustrated by American History, with the special object of supplying information and argument for the Presidential campaign of 1896. This work was immediately adopted as a text-book in many colleges and universities and was in large demand by political committees and public speakers. A second and revised edition was published in 1902 and later ones in 1903 and 1904. Mr. White is a member of the Century, University, City, Barnard and Greek Clubs. In 1899 he published a translation of the Roman History of Appian of Alexandria in two volumes, upon which he had bestowed the labor of some years in the intervals of his editorial work. He has also edited the Sophismes Economiques of Frederic Bastiat and the Scienza delle Finanze of Luigi Cossa. Mr. White has been twice married; first, in 1859, to Martha Hale Root, daughter of Rev. David Root, of New Haven, Conn. (died in 1873); second, in 1875 to Amelia J. MacDougall, daughter of James A. MacDougall, of Joliet, Ill. (died in 1885). Three daughters by the second marriage live with Mr. White at his residence, 18 West 69th St., N. Y. City.

Born at Madison, Conn., in 1856; his father, Colonel Vincent Meigs Wilcox, commanded the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, during the late war. His father was a descendant of William Wilcoxson of Stratford, Conn., who settled there in 1639; his mother, Catherine Millicent Webb, traces her ancestry to Richard Webb, of Stamford, Conn., who emigrated as early as 1626, and was the founder of the well known Connecticut family of that name. Dr. Wilcox was educated at Yale College, by which he was graduated with honors as Bachelor of Arts 1878; 1881 received the degree of Master of Arts from Hobart College, and in the same year that of Doctor of Medicine from Harvard University; and in 1892 he was honored with the degree of Doctor of Laws by Maryville College. During the period in which he was engaged in the study of medicine at Harvard he served as house physician in the hospitals of Boston. After his graduation in medicine he spent fifteen months in medical study at Vienna, Heidelberg, Paris and Edinburgh, gaining there experience of the utmost value, and upon his return took up his residence in New York. In 1884 he was appointed a clinical assistant at the N. Y. Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital, in 1886 an instructor in the same institution, and in 1889 he was chosen professor of medicine. As a teacher of practicing physicians he is well and favorably known for his extensive practical experience, broad scholarship, and scientific enthusiasm. His service at the Northeastern and Demilt Dispensaries and in the wards of Bellevue, Post-Graduate and St. Mark's Hospitals has been utilized, not only for his personal study, but as well for the instruction of the profession at large. He is also consulting physician to the Nassau hospital. Dr. Wilcox is a frequent speaker at the various medical organizations of which he is a member—the American Academy of Medicine, Medical Jurisprudence, American Therapeutic and the Clinical, County, State, Greater New York and Harvard Medical Societies; of the last he has been president; he is an honorary member of the Connecticut State Medical Society. He has been a prolific writer upon medical and therapeutic subjects, having published more than two hundred and fifty papers, most of which have been translated into French and German and have been extensively quoted in the American journals. Author: Materia Medica Therapeutics, Fever Nursing. Member of the Societies of the Colonial Wars, Sons of the Revolution, War of 1812, Military Order of Loyal Legion, and Sons of Veterans; of the last he has been surgeon-general. He is the author of the Descendants of William Wilcoxson, Vincent Meigs and Richard Webb. He is also a member of the Metropolitan and the Calumet Clubs. Address, 679 Madison Ave., N. Y. City.

After finishing a course in the Reading High School in 1877 he went to Philips Academy, Andover, where he graduated from the classical department in 1880 with the valedictory; thence he went to Amherst College, where he was graduated with honors in 1884; during a part of the following year he was instructor in Latin at his Alma Mater, but resigned at the close to pursue his studies in other fields. Between 1885 and 1887 he worked in the schools of law and political science at Columbia College; during the second year he held there the Seligman fellowship in political science, and at the end of the time he received the degree of LL.B. and was admitted to the N. Y. Bar. Preferring teaching to the practice of his profession he returned to Amherst as lecturer on law and instruction in philosophy. Thence he went to Yale for a year of graduate work in theology and philosophy and ended his course as a matriculated student with a year in the University of Berlin. His doctor's thesis The Divorce Problem, a Study in Statistics, was presented to the faculty of political science of Columbia College soon after his return and published under their supervision in 1891. In the spring of 1891 he was appointed instructor in philosophy in Cornell University; in 1892 he was made assistant professor of social science and statistics, and in 1894 associate professor, and in 1898 full professor of these subjects. In 1901 the title of his chair was changed to that of political economy and statistics, and in 1902 he was made dean of the faculty of arts and sciences. Between 1899 and 1901 he was stationed at Washington on a two years leave of absence as chief statistician in charge of the division of methods and results in the U. S. Census Office, and since his return to Ithaca, in 1901, he has kept up his connection with the Census Office, completing a report upon the work of his division. In the summer of 1903 he was a delegate representing the U. S. Government at the Eleventh International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, held at Brussels, and also a delegate at the ninth meeting of the International Statistical Institute held at Berlin. Address, Ithaca, N. Y.

WILCOX, William B.:

Postmaster, New York City; born Smyrna, N. Y., 1863, and after he was graduated from the Normal School in Brockport, he won high honors in the University of Rochester. He served as principal in the Webster Academy and in the Spring Valley High School; he came to New York and entered the Columbia Law School, from which he was graduated with high honors in 1889, and in the following year was admitted to the Bar. Shortly thereafter he wrote several treatises on political and social economy and became interested in educational progress on the East Side of New York City. In a short time he was known as an active member of the Union League Club and of the New York Bar Association, and took a wide interest in advancing clean politics inside the Republican organization. His participation in active politics dates from his nomination for representative in the Thirteenth Congress District, where he made the race against O. H. P. Belmont in 1900. The district was then overwhelmingly Democratic, and the nomination of a Republican was little more than a matter of form. Mr. Wilcox entered into the campaign with such energy and cut down the Democratic vote so substantially that he amazed his friends as well as his opponents. His activities in other directions outside of politics attracted attention. After Seth Low was elected Mr. Wilcox was appointed park commissioner. In his new office he justified the soundness of Mayor Low's judgment. He took a deep personal interest in maintaining the public breathing spots and in adding to their beauty and attractiveness. In this he was aided by a natural love of botanical research. During his term of office he caused to be improved and laid the foundation for the improvement of many hundreds of acres of public grounds that came under his jurisdiction. Address, Post Office, N. Y. City.

WINDMULLER, Louis:

Merchant; a native of Westphalia, received a collegiate education at Münster in a gymnasium founded by Charlemagne. He emigrated to the U. S. in 1853, coming to N. Y., which city has remained his place of residence. Here he soon became a successful merchant. The financial institutions with which he has been associated, and which he took part in founding, are the Title-Guarantee and Trust Co., the German-American Insurance Co., the Hide and Leather National Bank, the German Alliance Insurance Co., the Maiden Lane Savings Bank, the Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co., and the Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co.; with some of these companies he is still associated as director; he is president of the Maiden Lane Savings Bank. One of the founders and since 1889 treasurer of the Reform Club, of N. Y. Member of the German-American Reform Club, and as one of its executive committee, took an active part in the election of William L. Strong as reform mayor of the City of N. Y. He has been indefatigable in the advocacy of a sound currency and tariff, and civil service reform. His interest in public affairs is shown in his membership and active work in several other associations for municipal and State improvement; among these may be named the Chamber of Commerce Committee on Internal Trade and Improvements, of which he was chairman; and the executive committee for the improvement of the State canals, as a member of which he agitated successfully for the amendment to the Constitution which authorizes the Legislature to make the necessary appropriations; he was, in addition, auditor of the Business Men's Relief Committee, and member in a number of charitable institutions. Among these is the Legal Aid Society, which furnishes gratuitous advice to the ignorant needy without regard to nationality; in this useful institution he is treasurer and a member of the board of directors. Among the earnest and effective efforts in behalf of charity which have been made by him may particularly be mentioned his valuable services for the benefit of the German Hospital Fair in 1888; for this he arranged a collection of paintings, which proved so potent and attractive that over $100,000 were cleared for this institution. He is an occasional contributor to magazines and has written articles in favor of cremation for the North American Review, How to Shield Our Birds, for the Outlook, A Plea for Parks, for the Forum, Pleasures of City Pedestrians for The Review of Reviews, etc. Outside his connection with bodies devoted to reform and charity he is a member of many other N. Y. organizations, including the Merchants, German, Lotos, Underwriters, Athletic, and various other clubs; the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the N. Y. Historical Society, of which he is a life member; he was also treasurer of a fund for the erection of a monument to Goethe, and vice-president of the Heine Monument Society. Author: Views and Interviews on Journalism; What Shall Our Boys Do for a Living? Twilight Tracts; History of Greene Co.; An Episode in Municipal Government, etc. Address, 20 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

WINGATE, George W.:

Lawyer; national guardsman; author; born N. Y. City, July 1, 1840; descended from an old New England family Payne Wingate being first Senator from New Hampshire, and close friend of Washington. The family were represented in the Colonial and Revolutionary Wars and the War of 1812. He was educated in the public schools, and entered the Free Academy, but at the age of thirteen family reverses obliged him to become a boy in a law office. Admitted to the Bar in 1861, and has since practiced, being prominent in railroad litigation; for many years vice-president of the Brooklyn Elevated and director in several other railroads.. Is general solicitor of the Long Island R. R. and its associate companies. Was for several years a sachem of Tammany Hall and its counsel, as well as the personal counsel of the late John Kelly after the latter had wrested its control from Tweed. Was counsel for Tammany Hall in its prosecution of Commissioner Davenport for his wholesale arrests of naturalized citizens, and succeeded in having his acts declared illegal; also in the prosecution and conviction of Police Commissioners Charlick and Gardiner for the violation of the Election Law. Enlisted in a cavalry company at the outbreak of the Rebellion; after it was disbanded enlisted in the Twenty-second Regiment, N. Y., in which he finally became captain; served with Twenty-second in 1862-63. Is often called "the Father of Rifle Practice in America." Drafted and secured the passage of the act establishing the Creedmoor rifle range, which was constructed under his supervision. Was the first secretary then vice-president, and afterwards president of the National Rifle Association for many years. There being no text-book for instruction in shooting, he wrote Wingate's Manual of Rifle Practice, in 1871, which was for many years the only work on the subject adapted to American troops and was adopted by N. Y. and many other States; the Army Manual is largely founded upon this book. He was one of the organizers of the Amateur Rifle Club and its first president; was captain of the first team of American Long Range Rifle men in the great international rifle match at Creedmoor in 1874; has been connected with all other rifle teams that have shot in international contests. In 1874 he was appointed general inspector of rifle practice in N. Y. State, with the rank of brigadier general, which position he held under Governors Tilden and Robinson until his resignation, Oct., 1879. While in this position he organized and carried into successful operation the system under which the N. Y. National Guard, then numbering nearly 20,000, all utterly ignorant of the use of their rifles, in a few years became good shots; a system which has since become universal in the national guard and army. He was president of the National Guard Association of the U. S. for many years, and has been active in procuring legislation to increase the efficiency of the militia. From 1893 to 1896 he was special aide on the staff of the Commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic on the subject of military instruction in the public schools; tendered the nomination of Supreme Court Judge in 1895 and declined. Appointed by Mayor Low a member of the Board of Education in 1902, and has been chairman of the committee on lectures and libraries; as such has been prominent in developing the system of free lectures and of class libraries in the public schools in N. Y. City. He figured conspicuously in the attacks upon the Tweed ring, many of the editorials in the N. Y. Press against the Ring Judges being written by him. Author: On Horseback through the Yellowstone; The Great Cholera Riots; The History of the Twenty-second Regiment, and numerous essays; been prominent in advocating an increase of the artillery and the improvement of the army and national guard. Has been prominent in the organization of the public schools Athletic League for the improvement of the physical condition of the New York school children, and is its president; is an enthusiastic sportsman; has fished and hunted over the greater part of the U. S. and Canada; is a crack shot with rifle, pistol or shotgun, and an expert fisherman and tennis player. WRIGHT, Maurice L.:

Justice of the N. Y. State Supreme Court; born Scriba, N. Y., Nov. 27, 1845. He is a descendant of Samuel Wright, who emigrated from England with the Winthrop Colony to Massachusetts in 1630. His great-grandfather, Caleb Wright, was in the battle of Bennington and supplied himself with bullets by melting the weights of his eight-day clock. On his mother's side, Justice Wright is descended from Walter Woodworth, a native of Kent, England, who settled in Massachusetts prior to 1835. In this line is Captain William Woodworth, who served under General Washington and commanded the troops in Westchester County, N. Y. His son, Major Lott Woodworth, was in the War of 1812 and commanded his regiment at the battle of Plattsburg. Justice Wright was educated at Mexico Academy and at Falley Seminary, New York. In 1864 he enlisted in the U. S. Navy. He was assigned to the gunboat Valley City, of the North Atlantic Squadron, commanded by Admiral Porter. He was in the Roanoke Expedition following the sinking of the ram Albemarle by Cushing and saw much hard service. After the war he finished his education and studied law in the office of Congressman John C. Churchill, of Oswego, N. Y. Later he entered the Columbia Law School in N. Y. City. He was graduated from the Columbian College Law School at Washington, D. C., in 1870. He was then admitted to the Bar of the District of Columbia. In 1872 he was admitted to the Bar of N. Y. State and formed a law partnership with Hon. T. W. Skinner, at Mexico, N. Y. For twenty years he practiced law there successfully. In 1879 he was elected president of the village and served two terms. In 1883 he was elected County Judge of Oswego County by the Republican party. He was re-elected in 1889. Governor Hill appointed him a member of the constitutional commission of 1890, to revise the judiciary article of the State constitution. In 1891 he was elected justice of the N. Y. Supreme Court, which office he now holds. On Nov. 3, 1869, he married Miss Mary Grace Skinner, daughter of Judge Avery Skinner, of Union Square, N. Y. YERKES, Charles Tyson:

Capitalist, railway promoter; born Philadelphia, June 25, 1837; son of Charles and Elizabeth L. Yerkes. He is of Quaker origin and attended the Quaker schools of Philadelphia, and afterward the high school. He began his business career as a clerk in the commission house of J. P. Perot & Brother. At twenty-one opened a stock broker's office in Philadelphia, three years later purchasing a banking house and dealing exclusively in first-class Government and other bonds. He failed in 1871 for a large amount, the City of Philadelphia, as a depositor, being one of his creditors. Being sued by the city, he was convicted of misappropriating public funds, a decision which was subsequently pronounced illegal. He immediately resumed business and through his great energy and successful investments in the West he in a few years regained a large part of his fortune. He became prominent in street railway operations in Philadelphia, and subsequently in Chicago, of which city he was for some time a resident, and where he finally became the head of the north and west side surface railroads, and of several suburban and elevated railway corporations. He is at present largely interested in the construction of the system of underground railways in London. Mr. Yerkes gave the Chicago University a telescope costing $400,000, and said to be the finest instrument of its kind in the world. His private art gallery in his residence at New York is one of the most complete in existence, and is valued at more than $2,000,000. He married Mary Adelaide Moore, of Philadelphia. CORELLI, Marie:

Novelist; of mingled Italian and Scotch (Highland) parentage and connections; adopted in infancy by Charles Mackay, the well-known song-writer and litterateur, and brought up during childhood in England. Afterwards sent to France and educated in a convent, where she received, with other instruction, a first-class musical training. She commenced to write an elaborated opera entitled Ginevra Da Siena, when barely fourteen. She also wrote two songs, My Sweet Sweeting, and Romeo's Good Night. Her first attempts in literature were three sonnets on Shakespearean themes, and were published by Clement Scott, then editor of The Theatre. They were entitled Romeo and Juliet, Rosalind, and Desdemona, and were written while still at work on her musical education; her adopted father's intention being to fit her entirely for a musical career. A curious psychical experience occurring to herself personally, caused her to write her first book, A Romance of Two Worlds, published in 1886. It was an instant success, and from that time she has devoted herself entirely to literature. She has never, however, abandoned her love of music, and is a proficient on the piano and mandolin. She has no particular hobbies, except a great love of flowers, and a taste for collecting rare old books, of which she has many unique specimens. Her favorite recreations are reading and music. She is unmarried. At the end of 1897 a dangerous illness, nearly ending in her death, interrupted her work, and while slowly recovering from this during the spring of 1899 George Erie Mackey, (second son of Charles Mackay), who had been nominated at his father's death as her legal guardian, being many years her senior, died suddenly of pneumonia, leaving her entirely alone in the world. The shock of this bereavement prostrated her again with serious illness, and it was not till the end of April 1899 that she recommenced her literary labours, and in fifteen months produced Boy, a sketch (a short story contracted for previously to her illness in 1897), and the Master Christian, both published in the summer of 1900. Her health is now fully re-established. She has given up her house in

CHAFFEE, Adna R.:

Lieutenant-General U. S. Army; born Ohio, 1842, and entered the service of his country as a private of the Sixth Regular Cavalry, soon after the outbreak of the Civil War, at the age of nineteen, and has been conspicuous in her service ever since. Before the end of the first year of the war he was made a sergeant, and served in a number of minor actions, as well as in the battle of Fredricksburg, and also took part in Stoneman's raid in 1863, when he was appointed a second lieutenant of the Sixth Cavalry. He was twice severely wounded, was present at the battle of Gettysburg and at most of the important actions of Sheridan's raid and the affairs which led up to Appomattox, and received two brevets during that war. Just before the end of the Civil War he was promoted to first lieutenant, and two years later to captain. After the Civil War his life was still in the field, being brevetted for gallantry for an engagement with Comanche Indians in 1868, and serving in the Miles campaign against Cheyenne Indians in 1874-75, in the campaign against White Mountain Indians in 1881, and in an engagement with White Mountain Indians in 1882 (where he was commended in department orders and again brevetted), and finally in Crook's campaign in Mexico in 1883. In 1888 he was promoted to major, and in 1897 to lieutenant-colonel. He has served in all the grades of rank, even in the staff positions of regimental adjutant and quartermaster, and has risen from the lowest to the highest, always efficient in every position he has occupied, and winning the confidence and praise of his superiors. At the outbreak of the Spanish War he was appointed a brigadier-general of volunteers, and in July, 1898, a major-general of volunteers. His work at Santiago again won him glorious tributes from all sides, especially from the army. After the close of the Spanish War, General Chaffee was promoted to colonel in the regular army. Meanwhile he had been again brigadier-general of volunteers, but was promoted to major-general of volunteers in 1900 and placed in command of the China expedition for the relief of the ministers in Peking, where he did excellent service. For the next two years he was in the Philippines, accomplishing to the satisfaction of the Administration, the War Department and the Army all that was required of him, with honor and credit. He was appointed a brigadier-general in the regular service and later a major-general, and is now chief of Staff of the U. S. Army, with Headquarters at Washington.

FOLK, Joseph W.:

Governor of Missouri; he was born in Brownsville, Tenn., on Oct. 28, 1869, and is the youngest Governor Missouri ever had. His father was Judge Henry B. Folk, of Brownsville, and his mother is a descendant of the Estes family of Virginia. He received his literary and legal education at Vanderbilt University, going to St. Louis in 1892, where he identified himself with the younger element of the Democratic party. He was one of the charter members of the Jefferson Club, which has become the leading Democratic organization of the city, and was elected its president in 1898. His first step into prominence, however, was taken in 1900, when St. Louis was thrown into confusion by the great street car strike of that year. After every effort at arbitration had failed Mr. Folk took a hand and attracted the leaders of both sides, bringing about a settlement of a strike that had caused loss of life and widespread destruction of property. He was a lawyer and this feat made him a logical candidate for office, and he was nominated and elected District Attorney. His first task was to prosecute men of his own party against whom the cry of fraud at the polls had been raised. He brought the straw-bondsmen, with whom the State was overrun, to their Waterloo, sending four to the penitentiary. He then assailed the corruptionists, and Councilmen, Aldermen and big men in the party fell before him. His life was threatened more than once, but he continued undeterred. The keynote of the Gubernatorial convention last July was the fight against bribery and corruption, and Mr. Folk got the nomination, winning at the election, although the State went Republican for the national ticket. Mr. Folk has four brothers living and is married, but has no children. Address, Jefferson City, Mo.

FORAKER, Joseph Benson:

FRICK, Henry Clay:

Coke and iron manufacturer; born West Overton, Pa., Dec. 9, 1849. His ancestors came from Switzerland in 1750 and settled in Pennsylvania. His maternal grandfather, Abraham Overholt, was one of the largest landholders of his time in the southwest section of the State. Mr. Frick was educated in the public schools and at Otterbein University, Ohio, and began his business life as a store clerk at Mount Pleasant, Pa., becoming, in 1869, a bookkeeper in his grandfather's office at Broad Ford. The value of the coking-coal deposits at this locality attracted his attention in 1871, and after a thorough investigation of the material and the business, then in its infancy, he formed with several friends the partnership of H. C. Frick & Co., bought 300 acres of coal lands, and built about fifty coke ovens. The business proved very profitable, there being a ready sale for its product, and after the panic of 1873 he bought and leased works and lands widely; in 1876 bought out his partners, and in 1882 formed the H. C. Frick Coke Company, with $2,000,000 capital. The Carnegie Bros. & Co. soon became large stockholders in the company, and the capital was increased to $10,000,000. This company is now the largest coke producer in the world, owning in the Connellsville region 40,000 acres of coal lands and 12,000 coke ovens, employing more than 11,000 hands and yielding about 25,000 tons of coke daily. In 1889 Mr. Frick became a member of the firm of Carnegie Bros. & Co., and on its consolidation in 1892 as the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, with a capital of $25,000,000, he became the executive head of the organization. Of the labor disturbances with which he had to deal, much the most notable was the strike at the Homestead works of the company in 1892. This was brought about by his efforts to equalize the rates of wages and reduce the extravagant pay of the "tonnage men." A lockout ensued, extreme disorder and rioting broke out, and on July 23, while he was seeking to adjust the difficulties his office was entered by a man named Berkman, who shot him twice and stabbed him. In spite of his severe wounds he kept up the contest, and in the end won the fight, and within less than a year after the new scale of wages was adopted, the men acknowledged that he was right, and the strike unjustified. Since 1892 there have been no more labor troubles in the two companies with which Mr. Frick is connected, and their employees are the best paid workmen in the world. In 1895 his duties as Chairman of the Carnegie Steel Company were reduced by the appointment of a President, and in 1897 he ceased to manage the minor affairs of the coke company. In 1899 the properties of which he was the official head consisted of mines yielding 6,000,000 tons of iron ore annually; the coke lands and product above mentioned; steamship coal and ore carriers on Lake Erie; a railroad from Lake Erie to Pittsburg; 70,000 acres of natural gas territory; nineteen blast furnaces and five steel mills, yielding 3,250,000 tons of steel annually. In 1899 a personal dispute on financial matters arose between Mr. Frick and Mr. Carnegie, but this was soon adjusted and was followed by the formation of the Carnegie Company, with $160,000,000 paid-up capital, and including the steel and coke works with numerous subsidiary companies. Since then the United States Steel Company has been organized, with $1,100,000,000 capital, the most stupendous industrial enterprise in the world. Mr. Frick personally is a modest and unassuming man, though with abundant firmness and courage when needed. He is unostentatiously and genuinely charitable. In 1881 he was married to Adelaide H. Childs, of Pittsburg, and has one son and one daughter living. Address, Pittsburg, Pa.

Member of University, Commercial, Country, German, Indianapolis Manhattan, New York, Clubs. Address, 964 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind.

MORTON, Paul:

Secretary of the Navy, the second of his family in direct line to occupy a Cabinet position; is son of J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture under Cleveland. Although the father's affiliations were with the Democratic party, Secretary Morton parted from the bulk of the party on the currency issue and Paul Morton found himself both in 1896 and more strongly in 1900 entirely out of sympathy with the ruling opinion in Democratic circles. Although only comparatively recently an avowed Republican, he has been an adherent to the cardinal principles of Republicanism for several years, and his appointment was a recognition, in so far as it had any political meaning, of the large number of voters who had been added to Republican strength in the past eight years. The reason of the appointment of Paul Morton as Secretary of the Navy was, however, his ability as an executive and an organizer. He was born in Detroit, Mich., May 22, 1857. When six months of age he was taken to Nebraska by his parents, the movement being into a new country and as pioneers. He had a common school education and at the age of sixteen years went to work for the Burlington and Missouri Railroad at Plattsmouth, Neb. His rise was rapid, and at the age of twenty-one he was the general freight agent of the C., B. & Q. From 1890 to 1896 he was vice-president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company and president of the Whitebreast Fuel Co. In 1896 he went to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad as their vice-president, and was second vice-president at the time the Secretaryship of the Navy was offered to him, being the traffic manager of the road and handling the great affairs relating to the passenger and freight traffic of the great system. The persuasion and influence of President Roosevelt, for whom he has a great admiration, induced him to give up this position with a salary of $35,000 a year for the Secretaryship and its $8,000, with expenses much greater than the salary. Secretary Morton is tall and fine looking. While he came to the department without knowledge of naval affairs, he has the capacity for quick learning, which is inseparable from a man who is able to handle large projects and is a broad gauge man in every way. He has taken a deep interest in naval matters, and already finds an interest and fascination in the work that will keep him in office for a considerable time. He is just and fair-minded, and there is every reason to believe that the admirable administration of Secretary Moody, with its valuable results for the welfare of the Navy, will be followed by an equally valuable administration by a trained business man, accustomed to large affairs. Secretary Morton is married and has two daughters, one of whom is about to enter society. Address, Washington, D. C.

ristown, Lamoille County, Vt., November 2, 1848. When four years of age his people moved to Stowe, where he received a common school education, with a few terms in the village high school and in People's Academy, at Morrisville. When twenty-one years of age he went to Iowa, was graduated from Cornell College in 1874, and from the Iowa College of Law in 1876, having earned the means with which to educate himself. After graduation he located in Denison, the county seat of Crawford Co., Iowa, and engaged in the practice of law. He was led by the demands of the community into the negotiation of farm loans, and from that into general banking at Denison, at Manilla, and at Charter Oak, in the same county. While keeping the practice of law in the foreground, he was thus kept in touch with financial matters, both East and West. Until 1896 he took no active part in politics, excepting in national campaigns, when he frequently made speeches in defense of the principles of the Republican party, in which he was a firm believer. In 1896, at the request of the State central committee, he placed his entire time at its disposal. This led to his nomination for governor and election in 1897, and his reelection in 1899, in which he doubled his previous plurality and quadrupled his previous majority. He preemptorily declined a third term, and planned to return to his law practice and business interests. A few days before the close of his term, however, without solicitation or suggestion from himself or friends, he was tendered the position of Secretary of the Treasury, and assumed the duties of the office on February 1, 1902. Address, Washington, D. C.

SHONTS, Theodore P.:

Head of the Isthmian Canal Commission. Mr. Shonts was picked out for his new post by reason of his experience and skill in railroad construction. He was a lawyer originally, but dropped that for work more to his liking. He was called in by the head of the Iowa Construction Co., which had a contract for building some branch lines in Iowa, and found itself unable to get the work done on time. Mr. Shonts took it up, and by his remarkable ability in the way of organization succeeded in rushing the work through. He personally directed the work of so many different gangs that he seemed to be everywhere along the line at the same moment. It was this striking success which led to his being put in charge of the work on the "Three Eyes" in Illinois. After he finished the construction work on this road he was elected its president. From there he went to the "Clover Leaf." Mr. Shonts is Pennsylvania-born, but spent his early youth in Centerville, Iowa, where he met Miss Milla Drake, who became his wife. She has been president of the Womans Athletic Club in Chicago. They have two daughters, who attend a boarding school in Washington. Address, Washington, D. C.

SMITH, Charles Emory:

Journalist and ex-Postmaster General; born Mansfield, Conn., Feb. 18, 1842; son of Emory B. and Arvilla T. Smith, and a descendant of Isaac Smith, a Captain in the Revolutionary War. The family removed to Albany, N. Y., when he was seven years old, and here he was educated in the public schools, Albany Academy and Union College, Schenectady, where he was graduated in 1861. He edited a daily paper in Albany for six months when he was sixteen years of age, during his school life at Albany Academy. In 1861 he became engaged under General Rathbone in raising and organizing regiments for the war; afterward taught for several years in Albany Academy, and in 1865 became editor of the Albany Express, to which he had previously contributed leading articles. During this interval, in 1863, he married Ella Huntly. They have no children. The Express greatly developed under Mr. Smith's editorial control, but he left it in 1870 to become editor of the Albany Journal, the recognized Republican organ in that city. He remained connected with the Journal till 1880, meanwhile taking an active part in politics, especially in connection with the Republican State Committee, the State party platforms for several years being practically his work. He was the first to introduce in these platforms an indorsement of the new doctrine of civil service reform. He served as Regent of the University of New York, 1879-1880. In 1880 Mr. Smith removed to Philadelphia, where he became editor of the Press, the most influential Republican organ of that city. He has since that date been editor of that journal, which has played a leading part in party politics under his control. Mr. Smith's active connection with political affairs has been long continued, and he has taken part in several Republican National Conventions, in which he was an efficient aid in preparing the party platforms. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison United States Minister to Russia, where he remained until 1892; and in April, 1898, he became a member of President McKinley's Cabinet as Postmaster General. In this position he had much to do with the establishment of free rural delivery of the mails, and remained in office until after the assassination of President McKinley, resigning on Jan. 15, 1902, under the Roosevelt administration, to resume his editorial duties. During this period Mr. Smith received the honorary degree of LL. D. from Union College, 1889; Lafayette College, 1899; Knox College, 1900, and Wesleyan University, 1901. He is a member of the Masonic order, the Union League, Philadelphia, and the Union League Club, New York. Address, 2008 Spruce St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TILLMAN, Benjamin Ryan:

U. S. Senator (Democrat) of Trenton; born Edgefield County, S. C., August 11, 1847; received an academic education under the instruction of George Galphin at Bethany, in the same county; quit school in July, 1864, to join the Confederate Army, but was stricken with a severe illness, which caused the loss of his left eye and kept him an invalid for two years; followed farming as a pursuit and took no active part in politics till he began the agitation in 1886 for industrial and technical education which culminated in the establishment of the Clemson Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Calhoun's old home, Fort Hill; the demand for educational reform broadened into a demand for other changes in State affairs, and he was put forward by the farmers as a candidate for governor in 1890; after an exciting and heated canvass he received the nomination in the Democratic convention by a vote of 270 to 50 for his opponent, and was elected in November following; this was his first political office, and he was re-elected in 1892 by an overwhelming vote; his term as governor was signalized by the passage of the dispensary law for the control of the liquor traffic by the State and by the establishment of another college, the Winthrop Normal and Industrial College for Women, at Rock Hill, an institution which bids fair to lead all similar schools in the South; entered the race for the Senate against General Butler and the two canvassed the State, county by county, with the result that Tillman was elected by the general assembly by a vote of 131 to 21 for Butler; was re-elected in 1901. His term of service will expire March 3, 1907. Address, Trenton, S. C.

Address, American Embassy, Berlin, Germany.

WANAMAKER, John:

the Huguenots who left France for the same reason. His father was a brick-maker, and the boy during his school life had his share of work to do in the brick yard; he left school at fourteen years of age and became an errand boy in a book store at $1.50 per week; later his ability as a clerk in a clothing store soon augmented his salary to $4.00; he took advantage of the opportunities of improving his education offered by the Young Men's Christian Association; his activity in this association brought him the position of paid secretary in 1857, but he resigned in 1861 to found a clothing business with his brother-in-law, Nathan Brown, at Sixth and Market Streets, which is still the clothing firm of Wanamaker & Brown; they began in a very modest way, but the business prospered, the ill health of Mr. Brown throwing the burden of the labor on Mr. Wanamaker. In 1868, when Mr. Brown died, the business was firmly established, and the house widely known from its liberal method of advertising; in 1869 a new establishment was opened in Chestnut street, under the title of John Wanamaker & Co., his brother Samuel being in charge; by 1871, Oak Hall as the Market street store was called, had spread over a space formerly occupied by forty-five tenants, and in 1875 Mr. Wanamaker purchased the old Pennsylvania R. R. freight depot at Thirteenth and Market streets, where he opened a clothing, hat and shoe store in 1876, and in 1877 extended it into a general dry goods store, embracing almost all classes of retail goods; the great success of the new establishment was due to the "new kind of store" upon a system never known before which its proprietor began, which brought him fortune in the end. His powers as a business organizer were extraordinary, and the old depot in time grew to be a vast and stirring mart of trade, all under his close supervision. In the conduct of his business he introduced a system of profit-sharing, and is said in the years 1888-89 to have distributed more than $100,000 among his employees. The Philadelphia store was followed in 1896 by a similar one in the A. T. Stewart building in N. Y., which has become equally prosperous. In 1904 he began to rebuild his Philadelphia store on a large scale, replacing the old building with one twelve stories high and covering a city square. He has shown himself very active in other directions;

he lent important aid to the war-time Sanitary Fair in Logan square, was one of the organizers of the Christian Commission, and took part in various charitable movements; he served efficiently on Finance Committee of the Centennial Exposition of 1876, lent his aid to the William Penn anniversary celebration of 1882, and was prominent in the movement for a pure water supply in 1886-87. A member of the Presbyterian Church, his talent for organization showed itself strikingly in the Bethany Sunday School, of which he took charge in 1858 with twenty-seven scholars, but which rapidly outgrew its accommodations, and in time became one of the largest in the country, with over 5,000 scholars; he aided the Young Men's Christian Association in erecting its new building and became its president, and is connected with the Williamson Trade School and other associations. He declined to become a candidate for Mayor and representative on the Republican ticket when offered him, but he took an active part in the 1888 Presidential campaign, and accepted the position of Postmaster General in President Harrison's Cabinet, this he filled very efficiently during the four years of the Administration, 1889-93, handling its affairs with his great business acumen, and introducing important improvements and economies in the service. At a later date he became very active in independent Republican politics, vigorously combating M. S. Quay in the contest for the United States Senatorship and making many trenchant and effective speeches. On the whole, he has made himself a power in the business world and has played an important part in administrative and political affairs. Residence, 2032 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., and Lindenhurst, Jenkinstown, Pa.

WARNER, William:

United States Senator from Missouri; born Wisconsin, 1840, and was educated at Lawrence University, Wisconsin. At the University of Michigan he studied law and was then admitted to the Bar. He enlisted in the army in 1862 and served in the Thirty-third and Forty-fourth Wisconsin regiments until the close of the Civil War. In 1865 he began the practice of law in Kansas City, which has been his home ever since. He was elected city attorney in 1867, county attorney in 1869 and mayor in 1871. In 1872 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and in 1882 was appointed United States District Attorney for Western Missouri, serving two years. Major Warner was elected to Congress in 1885, serving two terms. He was the Republican candidate for Governor in 1892, and in 1898 he was again appointed United States District Attorney, retiring in 1902. He has represented his party and State in the National Republican Conventions of 1872, 1884, 1888, 1892 and 1896. Major Warner has long been prominent in the councils of the G. A. R. and was Commander-in-Chief of the order from 1888 to 1889. March 18, 1905, Major Warner was elected United States Senator from Missouri and is the first Republican Senator elected from that State. METROPOLITAN STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

ABSOLUTELY MODERN AND HIGH CLASS IN ALL DETAIL.

JOHN T. DEVINE, PROPRIETOR.

What "THE SMART SET MAGAZINE" is

IT IS the "magazine of cleverness" in both prose and poetry.

ITS AIM is to entertain—with things worth while.

EVERY NUMBER has two things—Variety and Merit.

EVERY MONTH THERE ARE a complete novel, a goodly number of short stories, poems and bits of verse, an essay, and numerous jokes and humorous sketches. These tell about all kinds of people, all kinds of places, all kinds of things.

Why "THE SMART SET MAGAZINE" Excels

Because we give our entire efforts to one thing. None of our attention is wasted on editorial policies, illustrations, searches for weighty articles on political, historical or scientific subjects. All our time, all our thought, all our money, all our energies, are devoted to one thing only—to securing the best fiction, the best poetry, and the best humor. And we do it!

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA.

HARRY F. WEST, President.

YOUR INSURANCE should be adapted to your circumstances, age and occupation.

If you need to emphasize protection you will buy a Life Policy.

If you wish to combine Saving and Investment with insurance, you will buy an Endowment Policy.

If you are advanced in years and wish to be relieved from financial care you will buy an Annuity Contract assuring you an annual income for life.

If you are undecided as to the kind of Policy, or if you do not now feel able to carry the kind you think you want, THE PENN MUTUAL has a low-premium Policy well suited to your case. This contract enables you to start your insurance now, and to have your payments credited on any other policy you may wish to select later—the premium rate of the new policy to be that of your present age.

FRANK MILLER CO.

OFFICERS of the Army have for many years past known very favorably the Harness Dressing manufactured by the Frank Miller Co., of New York, and the sale of this preparation has been a steady growth until now it is asked for by the majority of officers who have occasion to make requisitions for dressing either for harness or military accoutrements of any description. There is an old and true saying that "Good wine needs no bush," but the publishers of this magazine cannot refrain from saying to the officers of the service who have not yet tried the Miller preparations that they would serve their best interests by including the Miller Harness Dressing in their next requisition; and if they succeed in getting it, and not a substitute, they will be fortunate. No concern in New York stands higher in mercantile circles than the Frank Miller Co. The house has been in business for over sixty-five years, and to-day their goods are well and favorably known, not only in this country and our new possessions, but also in England and on the Continent. They are also sold extensively in Canada, England, Australasia, Egypt, India, South Africa, New Zealand, Germany, Holland, China, Japan, the Philippine Islands, the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America, and the Hawaiian Islands. The highest award at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893 was received by the Frank Miller Company for their leather dressings and blackings, and perfected methods and processes have since greatly improved their quality in various respects.

"MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP"

ESTABLISHED 1836,

The oldest and most widely circulated Banking Journal in America.

The American Banker

ISSUED WEEKLY.

Subscription Price, $5 per Annum.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL.—Devoted to current finance, United States Treasury movements, foreign trade, and especially to the analysis of banking operations, statistics and practices.

BANKING NEWS.—Gives a list of all new banks each week, a list of failed and closed banks and changes in title and management. Considerable space is also devoted to the special mention of changes.

NATIONAL BANKS.—The Comptroller of the Currency supplies us weekly with complete reports relative to the organization of National banks, applications for authority to organize such institutions, together with all the changes in officers and reserve agents.

STATE AND PRIVATE BANKS.—All new and closed organizations; changes and incorporations are reported each week.

LEGAL DECISIONS.—The latest decisions of the courts on banking questions are carefully selected and digested by experienced lawyers each week.

CLEARING HOUSE RETURNS.—The Clearing House returns of the cities of New York, Boston and Philadelphia are given in detail. The total weekly clearings of every Clearing House in the country is also reported.

BANKERS' ASSOCIATIONS.—THE AMERICAN BANKER is the only Journal which gives reports of the proceedings of all the Bankers' Associations in full. It has been the first to advocate and support this movement among bankers, and has been instrumental in the organization of several associations. It will not be long before every State in the Union has its organization of bankers, and wide-awake bankers will want an authentic report of the deliberations of these associations.

INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES.—Under this head are described the latest issues of municipal, county and railroad bonds, stock offerings of banks, commercial associations, etc.

OBITUARY RECORD.—A record of all deaths of bank officers is given under this head each week.

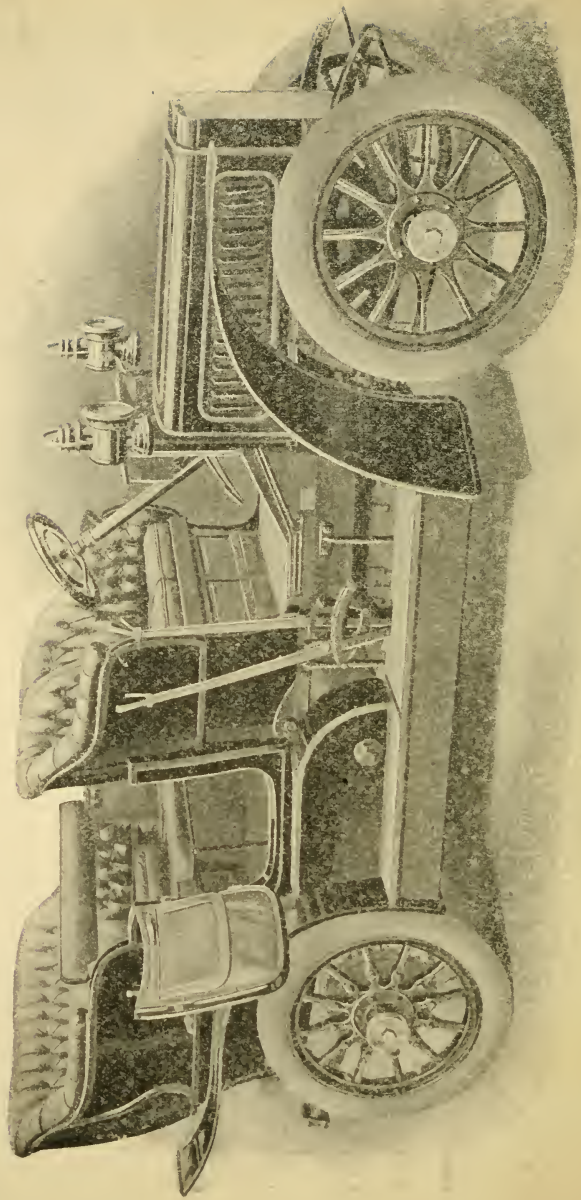

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.—Matters of special interest occurring in the business world are arranged in brief paragraphs, giving a comprehensive review of the week.

QUOTATIONS.—Bank stock quotations of the principal cities, Railroad Stocks and Bonds, and all active Stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange are given each week.
